Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his current timetable for implementation of the copyright term of the protection directive.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The directive requires member states to comply with its provisions by 1 July this year, and my intention is to lay the necessary implementing legislation before Parliament in sufficient time for it to come into force on that date.

Post Office

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names and number of main post offices or Crown offices which have been converted by Post Office Counters Ltd. since 1988 into agency offices run under franchise agreements.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Post Office that since 1988, Post Office Counters Ltd. has converted 114 Crown post offices to agency offices operated under franchise agreements. A copy of the list of these offices is being placed in the Library of the House.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the quality of service provided by insolvency practitioners in relation to the preparation of initial misconduct reports in the light of the National Audit Office's report on company directors' disqualification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Following the recommendations contained in the reports of the National Audit Office and the Public Accounts Committee, the Insolvency Service's disqualification unit has been monitoring the effectiveness of its programme to improve the quality and timeliness of initial misconduct reports submitted by insolvency practitioners. During the half-year ended 30 June 1994, 58 per cent. of reports received were considered to be of an acceptable quality across a range of criteria, including timeliness; during the six months ended 31 December 1994 this increased to 80 per cent.

Further improvements are expected when the unit commences a programme of guidance visits to practitioners who have a poor record of reporting; and after the introduction of revised report forms under the Government's de-regulation initiative.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the costs and savings which would result from contracting out the mechanical processing work of the Insolvency Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Stoy Hayward Consulting concluded that the case for contracting out and value for money grounds needed to be tested; and that a bidding process would provide such a test.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are expected to be the redundancy costs which would result from contracting out the mechanical processing work of the Insolvency Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No decision to contract out any functions of official receivers has been taken. It is therefore too early to say what, if any, redundancies would occur if such a decision were taken and what the related costs would be.

In the event that such a decision were taken, however, every possible step would be taken to avoid redundancies wherever possible.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now publish the Stoy Hayward report.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Stoy Hayward's report on options for involving the private sector in the work of the official receivers was published on 10 October 1994 by placing copies in the Libraries of the House and DTI library. The published version of the report does not include the appendices produced by the consultants as these contain financial information which is commercially confidential.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what legal advice he has received on the impact that privatisation of the Insolvency Service could have on the disqualification of directors and the prosecution of directors and bankrupts and on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No decision to contract out work of the official receivers has yet been taken; any decision would be subject to the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 and the procedures applicable to contracting out which are set out in it.

In the circumstances, it is far too early to consider the issue of Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations, the implications of which may not become clear until the nature of proposals in any bidding process could be assessed.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what power the Department of Trade and Industry's Insolvency Service has over the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales or registered professional bodies if it is found that they have ignored their own bye laws on a practitioner's duty to the public.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Insolvency Service, through frequent contact with officials of the recognised professional bodies and formal visits, seeks to ensure that each body deals with complaints against its members fairly, promptly and in accordance with its own rules, and that there is consistency between the bodies. Consideration would be given to withdrawal of recognition if a body was found to be acting in disregard of its rules.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to ensure that the facilities of the Insolvency Service continue to be provided within the public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The policy of Her Majesty's Government is that where work can appropriately be undertaken in the private sector it should be, subject to that representing value for money.

In the event that a decision is taken to contract out certain of the functions of official receivers to the private sector, official receivers, as statutory office holders, would continue to be legally responsible for the discharge of those functions. Furthermore, the work undertaken by Stoy Hayward concluded that the contracting out of administrative functions would enable official receivers to concentrate on their investigative role.

Paper Products (EC Preference Scheme)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the details of the outcome of negotiations with the European Community on revision of the generalised system of preferences scheme and its impact upon paper products.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Negotiations on the European Community's new generalised system of preferences were concluded on 19 December 1994. Paper products are classified in chapters 47 to 49 of the common customs tariff. All imports of such products classified in chapter 47 enter the Community free of duty. Paper products in chapter 48 of the tariff, imported from developing countries under the GSP scheme, enter the Community free of duty. Of those products in chapter 49 of the tariff, which are subject to duty, most are on the list of products categorised as being "sensitive" for Community industry. Imports of these products from GSP countries will therefore be charged 70 per cent. of the normal duty. Because imports of paper products from Brazil have become highly competitive, they will no longer be eligible for GSP benefits from 1 January 1996.

Electricity Companies

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce legislation to prevent foreign ownership of regional electricity companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have no such plans.

Nuclear Power

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to make a decision about the application by Nuclear Electric plc to build Sizewell C power station in Suffolk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Both relevant planning authorities, the Suffolk county council and the Suffolk Coastal district council, have objected to the application. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is therefore statutorily obliged to call for a public inquiry to be held. Details of the public inquiry will be announced as soon as practicable.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the outcome of the nuclear review.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 19 October 1994, Official Report, column 239.

Radar Jammers

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to prevent the sale in the United Kingdom of non-transmitter radar jammers.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Responsibility for the regulation of civil radio use in the United Kingdom has been delegated to the Radiocommunications Agency, under its chief executive Mr. Jim Norton. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Colin Pickthall, dated 16 January 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Question about the sale of radar jammers.

I presume you are concerned about equipment which it is claimed can either simply detect (ie receive) the operation of a police radar speedmeter or in some cases neutralise it. Under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1967 Orders can be made prohibiting the import, sale, manufacture or possession of radio apparatus which has the ability to cause interference to other radio use. The majority of radar detectors are simply radio receivers and are therefore inherently incapable of transmitting or causing interference to other radio use. Consequently it is not possible to make an Order under the Act prohibiting their sale, etc.

An Order could only be made in respect of those radar detectors which it is claimed neutralise police radars, by reflecting their signal, if it could be proved that they were so capable. To date we have no such evidence.

It is however an offence under the provisions of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 (the 1949 Act) to use any apparatus for the purpose of unauthorised reception or interfering with wireless telegraphy. Under this Act there is no bar as to who may instigate proceedings for offences under the Act. The Courts have also previously held that to offer for sale radio equipment which cannot be lawfully used is to incite members of the public to contravene the 1949 Act contrary to common law. Where radio equipment has been designed to be used for, or is used in the pursuit of other illegal activity, it is normal for the police or other relevant enforcement body to take the lead in any investigation. The Agency willingly assists in the investigation, by providing legal or technical advice, if asked to do so.

I hope this is helpful.

Textiles

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent changes there have been in the criteria or regulations for the granting of (a) regional selective assistance and (b) other development aid for expansion by textile firms in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The award of RSA and other development aid in support of expansion projects being undertaken by firms in the textiles and clothing sector is governed by EC state aid rules. Uncertainties arose last year about the need to give prior notification to the Commission of proposed aid to such projects. The temporary procedures introduced while member states reviewed the situation with the Commission, have now been removed and RSA and other forms of Government assistance continues to be available under established criteria.

Mortgage Interest Insurance

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the average insurance premium for a mortgagor wishing to take out insurance to cover mortgage interest payments in the event of unemployment and the total annual cost of such premiums for all those with mortgages.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 9 December 1994, Official Report, columns 390–91.

Self-regulatory Professional Bodies

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to institute an independent watchdog to oversee professional bodies which have self-regulatory powers.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have no plans to establish a body to oversee professional bodies which have self-regulatory powers.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received that the recognised professional bodies, to whom he has granted self-regulatory powers, are not acting within their own guidelines on the question of integrity within their complaints procedure.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have, on occasion, received representations that a complaint made against a member of a recognised professional body has not been dealt with fairly and/or promptly. Such representations are taken up by my officials.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to take action against members of registered professional bodies who fail to work within their own fundamental principles.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Where a recognised professional body is satisfied that a member has not observed the rules and regulations of the body which governs his professional conduct, it is a matter for that body to decide what disciplinary action should be taken.

Insolvency Practitioners

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to ensure that the fees of insolvency practitioners and the professionals they employ are levied at a fixed rate.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In most types of insolvency, the creditors fix the fees of the insolvency practitioner, subject to review by the court. In an administrative receivership, the fee payable is a matter for agreement between the debenture holder appointing him, and the insolvency practitioner, although it may be reviewed by the court on the application of a liquidator. It would not be practicable to specify rates of payment for services provided to an insolvency practitioner by other professionals.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to require that an insolvency practitioner appointed as a receiver should be a person different from the accountant or insolvency practitioner which prepared the report on the company's affairs.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The arguments for and against preventing accountants who act as advisers to banks from acting as administrative receivers of client companies have been considered and I am not convinced that the practice should be proscribed.

Company Liquidations

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to extend the receiver's duty of care to include the unsecured creditors and/or a guarantor of a company in receivership.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have no plans to do so.

British Coal Assets

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations underlay his decision not to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the proposed acquisition by R.J.B. Mining of certain assets of British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade's decision not to refer the proposed acquisition of certain assets of British Coal, namely the Harworth methane power generating plant and the minerals and aggregates, other than coal, extracted from opencast sites of Central North, South and North East Regional Coal companies, was in accordance with the Director General of Fair Trading's advice, which is confidential. My right hon. Friend took into account all relevant factors and concluded that the case raised no concerns justifying a reference.

Offshore Oil Industry

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to ensure that vessels and equipment for the new offshore Atlantic oil fields are built in Britain.

Mr. Eggar: A number of the oil and gas developments in the Atlantic are likely to use floating production facilities and my Department established a working group last year to assess the demand and United Kingdom companies' ability to compete for these facilities. The group was also asked to identify steps to strengthen United Kingdom competitiveness and its recommendations are being pursued with the industry. As a result of this work, the competitive position of United Kingdom companies has already improved.

Cable Damage

Mr. David Young: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimated cost of repairing damage to other undertakers' cables by NYNEX in the Bolton metro area covered by North West Gas Board and North West Electricity.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Cable operators' streetworks are subject to the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, which makes an undertaker liable to pay compensation for damage caused to another undertaker's apparatus. The estimated cost of repair for damage is therefore a matter for NYNEX.

HPC Virus

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to review the law of intellectual property in the United Kingdom following the decision of the High Court of Justice that Chiron Corporation of California has intellectual ownership of the virus HPC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: There is no reason to review existing patent law following the High Court decision in the Chiron case. The law is designed to encourage research and development in all fields of technology, including biotechnology, where inventions satisfying the criteria of patentability—novelty, inventive step and industrial applicability—are eligible for protection.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Support

Mr. Austin Michell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the annual cost to the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 years of EEC expenditure on agricultural support.

Mr. Jack: The Exchequer cost of agricultural support under EC schemes within the UK is set out in table 9.1 of the editions of the "Agriculture in UK" from 1988 to 1993, and for years prior to 1988 in table 9.1 of the Government White Paper, "The Annual Review of Agriculture". These publications have been deposited in the Library of the House of Commons. The 1994 edition of "Agriculture in the UK" will be published in March. The UK also contributes to the cost of EC agricultural support in other member states through our net contributions to the EC budget.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tonnage of each CAP product was dumped on world markets in (a) 1974 and (b) each of the past three years; and what was the loss per tonne incurred in each case.

Mr. Jack: Certain agricultural exports benefit from refunds which bridge the gap between EU internal and world price levels. The total volumes of CAP products exported from the EU in 1974 and in the last three years are given in the first table.

Since only some of these exports are subsidised by refunds, it is not possible to give a rate of expenditure per tonne for each commodity. Total expenditure on export refunds by commodity is shown in the second table.

Fishing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his letter, reference 81869, of 7 November 1994, to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what discussions he is having with the North West Atlantic Fisheries Organisation Scientific Council on the moratorium for the fishing for capelin (a) off east Greenland and (b) on the Grand banks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: There is a moratorium on the fishery for capelin on the Grand banks for 1995. The Scientific Council of the North West Atlantic Fisheries Organisation will make its recommendations for the 1996 total allowable catch to the annual meeting of NAFO in September 1995, at which the United Kingdom will be represented within the EU delegation.

The NAFO Scientific Council does not give advice on the capelin stock at East Greenland, Iceland and Jan Mayen. This is provided by the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea and management decisions are taken jointly by the Greenlandic, Icelandic and Norwegian authorities. The ICES advice in May 1994 was for a TAC for 1994–1995 of 1,430,000 tonnes.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date in 1994 he released the first suckler cow premium advance subsidy cheques to English farmers.

Mr. Jack: The first advance payments of the 1994 suckler cow premium were sent to farmers in England on 1 November 1994. This is the earliest date permitted by the EU regulations.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the members of his think tank on CAP reform were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Jack: None of the members of the CAP policy group were identified by the public appointments unit. Members were recruited from among contacts known to the Department, on the basis of their individual ideas and reputation for imaginative thinking, as well as their practical experience.

Infant Formulae

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends making the United Kingdom regulations to implement EC directives 91/321 and 95/52 on the composition, labelling and marketing of infant and follow-on formulae.

Mrs. Browning: The infant formula and follow-on formula regulations 1995 have been laid before Parliament today and will come into force on 1 March 1995 to implement the relevant EC legislation.

Following consultation, the Government have concluded that the current controls on advertising, which have been operated voluntarily by the industry, should be maintained where possible. We have therefore sought to incorporate the existing arrangements into the new regulations.

Agricultural Wages Board

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the employers' response to the consultation regarding the decision to retain the agricultural wages board.

Mr. Jack: The consultation period on the future operation of the agricultural wages board ran from July to November 1993. Over that period, almost 4,000 responses were received with only 10 advocating abolition of the board. Most employers and organisations representing employers' interests recommended retention; however, those responses recommending abolition came from employer interests. An analysis of responses was placed in the Library of the House on 9 June 1994. We also took into account comments received after the close of the formal consultation period.

Some further representations suggesting abolition of the board came from employers and organisations representing employers in the horticulture, poultry and mushroom sectors, with most noting concerns for their sectors of the particular impact of the 1994 AWB minimum wage settlement. However, the views of the great majority of employers and the main representative organisations remained unchanged.

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the likely effect of the decision to retain the agricultural wages board on wage rates and wage rate differentials in the agricultural sector.

Mr. Jack: The agricultural wages board is an independent organisation and reaches its own decisions on minimum wage rates and differentials. It is not possible to predict the future impact of the board's determinations on levels of remuneration in the agricultural sector.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on calves from Ireland being exported to the continent through Plymouth docks; and whether the British regulations as regards journey plans and feeding, watering and resting intervals apply to them.

Mrs. Browning: Movements of such animals from the Republic or Northern Ireland are covered by the provisions of the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 once the animals come within British jurisdiction and hauliers are required to comply with those provisions.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many animals were classed as too unwell to travel from Plymouth docks to France on the night of 19 December 1994;

(2) what assessment he has made of whether the welfare of livestock being transported abroad can be adequately accounted for when said livestock is in lorries on boats and the drivers of the lorries are not on the boats; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on the lorries exporting livestock from Plymouth docks on the night of 19 December 1994; how many lorries were turned away; and for what reasons.

Mrs. Browning: None of the animals inspected at the dock while in their lorries were considered too unwell to travel. However two lorries loaded with sheep were turned away because the veterinary inspection for health certification purposes had taken place more than 48 hours prior to their loading—the maximum period permitted under EC health rules. The ship sailed with 12 lorries on board and their drivers. Officials are now satisfied with the arrangements made by the shipping company to provide standby drivers on the French side for any lorry not accompanied by its driver. The vessel sails with a veterinary surgeon who assumes responsibility for the welfare of the animals until such time as they are driven away from the port of disembarkation.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the recent obstruction of vehicles carrying live animals for slaughter abroad.

Mrs. Browning: We deplore the activities of those who would disrupt by violent means the lawful activities of those engaged in this trade.

Abattoirs

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (a) the total capacity and (b) the total number of abattoirs in England in 1979, 1984, 1989 and 1994; and how many abattoirs in England now conform to the requirements of the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992.

Mrs. Browning: The number of licensed red meat abattoirs in England were:

1984: 961
1994: 424

In 1994 all 424 abattoirs were licensed under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992; 274 were operating under temporary derogations while upgrading their premises to comply in full with the structural requirements.

The Department does not hold figures on the total capacity of abattoirs.

Veal

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what public funding has been made available to promote the marketing of humanely reared veal in each of the years since the use of veal crates was banned in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Browning: The marketing development scheme is available for a broad range of marketing projects. This could include the marketing of humanely-produced veal, but no application has to date been made for this purpose.

Farm Animal Welfare Council

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who are the members currently appointed to the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Mrs. Browning: The current membership of the Farm Animal Welfare Council is as follows:

Professor Sir Colin R. W. Spedding CBE—Chairman

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on actions taken by his Department in response to recommendation 92–7 of the air accidents investigation branch report No. 2/92.

Mr. Soames: My Department, in conjunction with the Civil Aviation authority, has actioned the recommendation as follows:

(i) Civil operators continue to be notified of intense military low flying through the notice to airmen system.

(ii) Aeronautical information circular 63/1992 was published to provide civil users with information about the United Kingdom military low flying system, and advice on how to reduce the risk of confliction with military low-flying aircraft. a revised version, AIC 89/1993, was issued in June 1993.

Additionally, in response to recommendation 92–8 of the same Report, my Department has provided details, for inclusion on Civil Aviation Authority charts, of the unidirectional flows which apply to military aircraft in areas of greatest density of activity or where activity is restricted to a narrow corridor between avoidance areas.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions are imposed on the activation of on-board electronic counter-measures equipment by aircrew performing simulated low-level attacks on threat emitters located outside range areas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: There are strict procedures covering the activation of on-board electronic countermeasures equipment and no airborne jamming is permitted without prior authorisation having been granted or without two-way communications with the controlling authority.

Skyguard

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if aircrew carrying out sorties in the United Kingdom low flying system are informed of the locations of Skyguard radars deployed as electronic threat emitters in the low flying system.

Mr. Soames: When Skyguard is deployed outside RAF Spadeadam as an electronic warfare threat emitter, aircrews participating in the exercise may be informed of the location depending on the nature of the exercise.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and locations of deployments of Skyguard radars in the electronic warfare threat simulator role beyond the Spadeadam range boundaries since January 1992.

Mr. Soames: The dates and locations of deployments of the Skyguard radar in the electronic warfare threat role outside RAF Spadeadam since January 1992 are as follows:

Date	Location
17–22 May 1992	South Wales
25–29 January 1993	Sanquhar, Dumfries
11–16 July 1993	South Wales
26 November–3 December 1993	Tiverton, Devon
6–10 December 1993	Hunterston Power Station, Strathclyde
11–15 April 1994	RAF Odiham area, Hampshire
11–15 July 1994	Rhayader, Powys
24 September–1 October 1994	Liskeard, Cornwall
6–10 November 1994	Oban, Strathclyde

Tornado F3 Squadrons

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF Tornado F3 squadrons will be assigned to the NATO immediate reaction forces (air) from January 1995; and what proposals he has to increase this number.

Mr. Soames: It is not our practice to disclose such details of assigned forces. The annual statement on the defence estimates does, however, describe the assets planned to be assigned against NATO reaction forces generally.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have been held with (a) the United States authorities and (b) the German authorities concerning the development of facilities at Holloman air force base, New Mexico, for Royal Air force training.

Mr. Soames: No such discussions have been held.

NATO Reaction Forces (Air)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to designate specific air bases in the United Kingdom as locations for deployment and joint training by units of the NATO reaction forces (air).

Mr. Soames: None.

RAF Spadeadam

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the payments made by foreign air forces for use of the Spadeadam electronic warfare range facilities are credited to RAF Spadeadam's own financial accounts.

Mr. Soames: Payments made to the RAF by foreign air forces for the use of the range at RAF Spadeadam are credited to RAF Spadeadam's budget.

Slovakia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the aims of the visit of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence to Slovakia in August 1994; and what agreements were reached with the Slovak authorities as a result of that visit.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence visited Solvakia in August 1994 to represent the United Kingdom at the commemorations of the 50th anniversary of the Slovak national uprising. During discussions with the Slovak Defence Minister it was agreed that units of the armed forces of the Slovak Republic and of the United Kingdom should in future co-operate through a series of joint military exercises and that our respective military authorities would meet jointly to develop proposals. It was further agreed that this would be complemented by a programme of closer and more substantial military contracts.

RAF Training (Morocco)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the dates, locations, and numbers and types of aircraft involved in the next planned Royal Air Force training deployment to Morocco.

Mr. Soames: On current plans, six Royal Air Force Tornado GR1B aircraft will detach to Sidi Slimane air base in Morocco from 24 to 31 March to participate in a bilateral exercise with the Moroccan air force.

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the plans of his Department to make information available on Internet and the documents which he intends to be made available on Internet over the next year which will be accessible via the world wide web server "open.gov.UK" or any specific departmental server.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Cambridge (Ms Campbell) on 1 December 1994, Official Report, column 913.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether United Kingdom forces in battle during (a) the Falklands and (b) the Gulf conflicts deployed any of their stocks of German manufactured anti-personnel mines.

Mr. Soames: The UK has not held stocks of German manufactured anti-personnel mines since 1983. The last such mines still held at the time of the Falklands conflict were obsolete and were not deployed with British forces.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which manufacturers are currently supplying the United Kingdom armed forces with anti-personnel land mines, including those with self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanisms.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what types of anti-personnel land mines, including those with self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanisms, are currently in use or stocked by the United Kingdom armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom armed forces have in stock and available for use the following anti-personnel land mines:

(a) Mine, anti-personnel C3 (Elsie)

(b) Mine, anti-personnel M18 A1 (Claymore)

(c) Mine, anti-personnel L10 (Ranger)

None of the above types have self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanisms.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what definitions are used by his Department for (a) self-destruct and (b) self-neutralising anti-personnel land mines.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence is using the definitions included in the draft of protocol II of the UN weaponry convention, namely:

(a) Self-destruction mechanism means an incorporated automatically functioning mechanism which secures the destruction of the munition.

(b) Self-neutralising mechanism means an incorporated automatically functioning mechanism which renders a munition inoperable.

Service Personnel

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the statistics for divorces amongst service personnel for the period 1990 to 1994.

Mr. Soames: The number of recorded divorces for Army and Royal Air Force personnel is as follows:

	Army	RAF
1990	1,409	867
1991	1,352	862
1993	1,157	779

Figures for calendar year 1994 are not yet available.

The information requested for Royal Navy personnel is not held in a form which is readily available and could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify, by rank and by service, the entitlement to free trips home each year by personnel serving overseas; and if he will set out the cost of this provision for the financial year 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Soames: Generally, only serving personnel who are married but not accompanied by their wives, or single personnel under 25, with an expectation of at least 12 months service overseas, have the option of a return trip to the United Kingdom at public expense. Subsequently, there is an entitlement for a further return trip at public expense for each additional year overseas. This entitlement is not based on rank or service. Among the exceptions to the standard scheme are the Ascension Islands, Diego Garcia and the Falkland Islands, where service personnel in other domestic circumstances may also be entitled to such travel. Details of the costs of this provision are not held separately and could not be provided.

Civil Servants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1994, Official Report, column 897, if he will set out those officials who left the Defence Services Organisation to join defence or defence-related companies.

Mr. Freeman: Approval was given for the following applications from two officers in the Defence Export Services Organisation. It is not known if they were taken up.

BAe	1 x Commander RN
Computer Devices	1 x Commander RN
EDS/Scicon	1 x Commander RN
Ferranti International	1 x Commander RN
GEC-Marconi Naval Systems	1 x Commander RN
Marconi (Underwater) Systems	1 x Commander RN
MSI Defence Systems	1 x Commander RN
NI Tech	1 x Commander RN
Vosper Thornycroft	1 x Commander RN
Yarrow Shipbuilders	1 x Commander RN

Operation Granby

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if animals are used in scientific experiments relating to illness arising out of Operation Granby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 16 January 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if animals are used in scientific experiments relating to illness arising out of Operation GRANBY and if he will make a statement has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them.

3. No work is being carried out at CBDE to investigate illness which may have arisen out of Operation GRANBY.

4. However, following the Gulf conflict, increased emphasis has been placed on biological defence which primarily consists of detection and medical countermeasures. The programme of work on medical countermeasures includes the continuing study of both vaccines and antibiotics against a range of potential biological warfare agents. This work has necessitated the use of more animals.

Boarding School Allowance

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many children of serving officers in each service have school fees subsidised at public expense; which schools are involved; how many children of service personnel attend each; and what was the cost of this provision for 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Soames: My Department provides support to service parents for the education of their children by means of boarding school allowance; this is paid to assist in providing a stable education for their children in the face of the domestic turbulence frequently encountered in service life. The numbers of children in receipt of boarding school allowance in the academic year 1993–94, broken down by service, was: Royal Navy 2,492; Army 6,034; Royal Air Force 4,041. The cost of this provision for 1993–94 was £113.61 million. The total estimated expenditure for financial year 1994–95 is £104 million. Total expenditure reflects both the rate of the allowance and the total number of children in receipt of the allowance per term. I am arranging for a copy of the most recent, June 1994, list of schools and the number of children attending those schools who are in receipt of boarding school allowance to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many children have benefited from the boarding school allowance in each of the last four years.

Mr. Soames: The total number of children for whom boarding school allowance was claimed in the academic years in question was:

1991–1992: 16,208
1992–1993: 15,120
1993–1994: 12,567

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make statement about his future plans for the service children's boarding school allowance scheme.

Mr. Soames: My Department has no plans to amend the service children's boarding school allowance scheme. Service career and manpower structures and terms and conditions of service are, however, at present the subject of an independent review which I announced on 30 March 1994, Official Report, column 752.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of the boarding school allowance scheme in each of the last five years; and what is the projected cost for 1995–96.

Mr. Soames: The total cost to my Department of boarding school allowance for the years in questions was:

1991–1992: £115.35 million
1993–1994: £113.61 million

The total estimated expenditure for financial year 1994–95 is £104 million. Total expenditure reflects both the rate of the allowance and the total number of children in receipt of the allowance per term and it is not therefore possible to give an accurate assessment of the likely costs for 1995–96, although they are estimated to be similar to the amounts for 1994–95.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the private and independent schools which take children paid for from the service boarding allowance and have had full Ofsted reports; and if he will list those schools where all of the service parents have received copies of these reports in the last two years.

Mr. Soames: The total list of Ofsted reports on schools at which children benefitting from boarding school allowance are being educated is as follows:

School
Sherborne preparatory school, Dorset Finborough school, Suffolk Lime House school, Cumbria Roedean school, East Sussex St. Mary's school, East Sussex	Ofsted reports already forwarded to parents
Caldicott school, Bucks Perrott Hill school, Crewkerne Seaford college, near Petworth Shrewsbury school, Shropshire	Ofsted reports currently being forwarded to parents

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria his Department uses to determine whether a private or independent school may receive funding through the boarding school allowance scheme.

Mr. Soames: A list of some 800 schools in respect of which boarding school allowance may be paid is kept by my Department. Schools on the list are those which provide a normal standard of United Kingdom education and whose boarding facilities are under their immediate control. The school must also be registered with the Department for Education and must attain the acceptable standard of education as required by that Department. Further to this, the Service Children's Education Authority conducts its own school visits to satisfy itself as to the quality of accommodation and pastoral activities available.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if all parents of children benefiting from the service boarding allowance have received copies of Ofsted reports made on those schools that have had a full inspection in the last two years.

Mr. Soames: My Department has been provided with copies of reports dating back to February 1993. Since April 1994, the Office for Standards in Education has included the Service Children's Education Authority on the distribution lists of their inspection reports for private and independent schools. It is my Department's policy for the SCEA to forward these reports to service personnel whose children are identified as attending those schools. Due to an administrative error, a number of recent Ofsted reports had not been passed to the SCEA for onward transmission to parents, but this situation is now being rectified.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names and locations of the private and independent schools receiving moneys from the service children's boarding school allowance; and if he will give the number of service children at each of the schools listed and show how much each school is receiving.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave today to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett). Information on how much each school receives in boarding school allowance is not maintained centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

RAF Houses (Sales)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the sale price of 42 former RAF houses at Shotley gate, Ipswich.

Mr. Soames: Forty-two properties at Shotley gate were sold by competitive tender in December 1994. The price achieved is commercial-in-confidence.

Dress Allowance

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out, by service, the number of spouses of serving officers who are entitled to dress allowances at public expense; and if he will identify the cost of this provision for the financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Soames: No spouses of serving officers are entitled to dress allowance at public expense.

LSD Experiments

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, columns 312–13, in what years the Moneybags experiments were carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 16 January 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, Columns 312–3, asking in what years the Moneybags experiments were carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (CBDE) is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of that programme, evaluation is carried out of chemicals that may be utilised by an aggressor as a chemical warfare agent.

3. Moneybags was carried out in 1964 and was one in a series of studies carried out in the 1960s to assess the effects of LSD on troops in a military setting where the behaviour of those volunteers who had been given LSD could be compared with those control volunteers who had not been given LSD.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of LSD experiments called Recount carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down; in which years the Recount experiments were conducted; how many service volunteers were tested under the Recount experiments; what were the lowest and highest doses administered to service volunteers during the Recount experiments; what those volunteers were required to do under the Recount experiments and what types of animals were used; what was the conclusion of the Recount experiments; with which countries the results of those experiments were shared; and under which defence agreement the results were shared with those countries.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 16 January 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about work carried out with LSD at Porton Down known as Recount has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of that programme, evaluation is carried out of chemicals that may be utilised by an aggressor as a chemical warfare agent.

3. Recount which took place in 1966 was one in a series of studies carried out to assess the effects of LSD on troops in a military setting where the behaviour of those volunteers who had been given LSD could be compared with those control volunteers who had not been given LSD. The aim of Recount was to assess the incapacitant effects of small amounts of LSD on a unit of soldiers. Eighty men volunteered and were examined by a clinician, underwent a battery of psychometric tests and were interviewed by a psychiatrist to determine their suitability for exposure to LSD. In the event it was not found possible to include 27 men in the experiment, because their occupations (e.g., driver, cooks) were unsuitable and a further 34 were eliminated for either clinical or psychiatric reasons or a combination of both, and three were not available on the trial days. Some 28 Service volunteers participated of which 16 received LSD with the lowest and highest doses being 63 and 97 μg respectively and the other 12 were controls. This was given orally in water. No animals were involved.

4. Recount was designed to reproduce a normal military task which in this case was the deployment of an air defence regiment in the field and such an activity involved considerable use of integrative and planning skills.

5. Recount showed that the soldiers suffered a minor decrease in performance and the overall effects of this small dose of LSD were minimal. All the affected soldiers were examined and judged to have returned to normal within 24 hours.

6. It was concluded that even when a military unit is mildly affected by LSD the compensation resulting from good discipline and mutual support, between drugged and undrugged soldiers, can leave the unit relatively unaffected, in trial conditions at least, for a short task.

7. The results from Recount formed part of the technology database held by the Establishment in the area of evaluation of the potential hazard to Service personnel from possible chemical warfare agents. This information was drawn upon during the 1960s and 1970s in the agreements with our NATO allies to exchange information and so promote collaboration and cooperation in areas such as research and development in chemical and biological defence. The agreements with the United States at that time included:

a. The Technical Cooperation Programme involving UK, US, Canada and Australia which had subsumed the earlier trilateral UK/US/Canada meetings.

b. American, British, Canadian and Australian Armies (ABCA) agreement Quadripartite Working Group (QWG) on NBC defence.

c. The NATO Panel VII on chemical and biological defence.

Post-traumatic Stress Disorder

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning post-traumatic stress disorder; what research has been conducted into it by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department's response to post-traumatic stress disorder has three elements: prevention, recognition and treatment. Prevention and recognition of PTSD are combined command and medical responsibilities involving general education, pre-deployment psychiatric briefing, in-theatre education and counselling and post-deployment debriefing. The treatment of PTSD is undertaken by service psychiatric staff using internationally established and clinically recognised techniques.

Research within my Department into the disorder continues and a wide variety of PTSD-related articles written by members of the armed forces medical services have been published in professional journals. The progress of the large volume of outside research is also carefully monitored.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many retained sites in Cyprus were controlled by the United Kingdom under the London and Zurich agreements of 1960; how many of these retained sites have since been handed over to the control of the Cyprus Government; and at how many, and which, locations retained sites have been handed over to the Cyprus Government since the division of the island in 1974.

Mr. Soames: The treaty of establishment 1960 provided for 40 British retained sites in the Republic of Cyprus. They are listed in four schedules which form a part of that treaty, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Since then 25 complete sites and parts of six sites have been returned. Of these, eight complete sites and parts of one site have been handed back since 1974. These were as follows:

a. at the port of Limassol;
b. north-west of Zyyi (parts of);
c. at Cape Greco;
d. the water supply for the Cape Greco retained site;
e. at Polemidhia;
f. the water supply for the Polemidhia retained site;
g. north of Zyyi;
h. the water supply for the retained site north of Zyyi;
i. near Paphos, about ¼ mile from the top of Cape Paphos.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many retained sites, and at which locations, remain in (a) southern Cyprus governed by the Cyprus Government and (b) northern Cyprus governed by the government of the Turkish republic of northern Cyprus.

Mr. Soames: A total of 15 British-retained sites remain in Cyprus, of which 11 are in the south of the island and four in the north. The sites are:

a. (South)
at Troodos (two sites);
at Mount Olympus;
at Nicosia airfield;
water supply for retained site at Nicosia airfield on the coast, about five miles south of Larnaca;
on the outskirts of Limassol;
water supply for the retained site on the outskirts of Limassol;
at Kissousa, including the water source and pipeline to the Akrotiri sovereign base area;
at Limassol, in Paphos road.

b. (North)
at the port in Famagusta;
in Famagusta (three sites).

Airmisses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, locations and aircraft types and nationalities involved in each incident during 1993 in which a breach of low-flying avoidance area or CANP-notified area led to the filing of an airmiss; what was the involvement of the Royal Air Force provost and security service in investigating each of the reported breaches; and what disciplinary action was taken against the aircrew involved.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows. The RAF police were not involved since comprehensive investigation of airmiss reports is carried out by the joint airmiss working group. No formal disciplinary action was taken against any of the aircrew involved.

Date	Location	Aircraft Types	Military Operator
15 April	Milfield	PA-25 Pawnee Jaguar	United Kingdom
20 July	Eshott Glider Site	Microlight Tornado	Foreign
4 August	Winthorpe	Slingsby T61A Bulldog and Chipmunk	United Kingdom
23 August	Edgehill Glider Site	K13 glider Tornado GR1	United Kingdom
26 August	Pickering	Cessna 150 F-15	Foreign
26 August	Pickering	Cessna 150 F-15	Foreign
3 September	Bovington	K13 glider Lynx × 2	United Kingdom
14 October	Aboyne	PA-25 Pawnee Hawk	United Kingdom

Note:
It is not my Department's policy to identify the nationalities of foreign military aircrews involved in airmisses in the United Kingdom.

Exercise Hardcore

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the rules of engagement for Royal Air Force Harrier aircraft performing simulated attacks on Dutch surface-to-air missiles in Exercise Hardcore in early 1994.

Mr. Soames: RAF Harriers conducting simulated attacks against Dutch surface-to-air missiles as part of Exercise Hardcore were using the standard operating procedures and constraints laid out in the "UK Military Low Flying Handbook". No specific rules of engagement were formulated for the purposes of this exercise.

World War II (Anniversary)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 1192, what plans he has to charge war widows for joining in the programme of events planned to commemorate the end of World War II; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: It is not envisaged that charges will be made to any members of the public for admission to any of the Government-sponsored events.

Crown Housing Trust

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the salary and length of contract of the chief executive of the Crown housing trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The chief executive designate of the Crown housing trust was recruited on a three year fixed term appointment, with an annual salary of £80,000 plus possible bonuses of up to a further £20,000 linked to performance.

Post Traumatic Stress Disorder

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the last 15 years his Department has paid compensation to service personnel or former members of the armed forces who have suffered from post traumatic stress disorder.

Mr. Soames: Members of the armed forces may be subjected to traumatic experiences and may suffer stress as a result. We have a duty to ensure that they receive proper medical treatment, and the question of compensation arises only if there has been a negligent failure on the part of my Department. No-one has been compensated simply for having developed PTSD.

There has been one case in which a former soldier has been compensated for a failure to diagnose and treat PTSD. In some other claims for personal injury, PTSD may have been claimed as one of the consequences of an injury which was caused by negligence; if so, compensation may have been paid under the conventional heading of "pain and suffering". No figures are available for these cases and data is not held in a form which would enable such information to be extracted.

Sexual Orientation

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department maintains records of the sexual orientation of members of the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department maintains no such records. Such information would be recorded in individual cases only where this had given grounds for administrative or disciplinary action.

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mediation Service

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to establish a comprehensive national mediation service; in what way mediators will be trained and accredited; and how much he expects such a service to cost each year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has no plans to establish a comprehensive national mediation service. The Lord Chancellor is currently looking at arrangements for the training and accreditation of mediators, the funding of local mediation services and a national quality assurance system.

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to improve the accounting system at the Legal Aid Board so that it provides a more detailed statistical breakdown of the relative costs of different types of case.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board is currently developing new information systems which will, among other things, provide a more detailed breakdown of the costs of different types of case.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what (a) classes of plaintiff and (b) types of case which currently qualify for legal aid the Lord Chancellor envisages making ineligible for legal aid in the future; and how much public expenditure he expects to save with such measures.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor does not envisage removing either classes of plaintiff or types case from the scope of the legal aid scheme in the future. Under new proposals on which he will be consulting later in the year, it may be that, because of greater emphasis on assessments of local needs and priorities, some individual cases brought under the present system might not be brought. However, the proposals should mean that more people are assisted under legal aid than at present because of a more effective use of resources.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to publish a report on the results of the pilot projects in the use of citizens advice bureaux, law centres and other advice agencies as a means of dispensing legally aided services currently being undertaken in conjunction with the Legal Aid Board.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board expects to publish the results of its non-solicitor agencies franchising pilot in the spring of 1996.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what costing analysis he has done of the proposals for the reform of the legal aid system announced at the Social Market Foundation on 11 January; and when he expects to publish this analysis.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In his speech to the Social Market Foundation, the Lord Chancellor made it plain that he was outlining his preliminary ideas in advance of a more detailed consultation paper. No costings, therefore, have as yet been done.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of the total civil legal aid budget is currently deployed through citizens advice bureaux, law centres and other such advice centres.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In 1993–94, the last complete financial year, £4.8 million was paid to law centres, citizens advice bureaux and other independent advice agencies in respect of work carried out under the legal aid scheme. This represents 0.3 per cent. of the gross amount expended on legal aid in that year.

Multi-party Actions

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to publish and to implement new rules governing the conduct of multi-party actions in the English courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department is fully aware of the problems arising in multi-party actions and we are considering whether, and in what way, they might be mitigated by amendments to court rules and procedures. Any proposals for change will be put out to public consultation in the usual way.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has of the cost to the legal aid budget over the last five years of multi-party actions that (a) have come to trial and (b) have not come to trial.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Limitation Review

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to complete the review of the limitation legislation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: We have been looking at the rules on the time limits in proceedings for non-accidental personal injuries and have reached the conclusion that it would not be advisable to revise this aspect of the law in isolation. We are now considering whether a comprehensive review of the law of limitation generally should be undertaken.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Two of the individuals appointed to the Lord Chancellor's Department's public positions were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

HOME DEPARTMENT

War Criminals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the special unit set up at Scotland Yard to hunt for suspected Nazi war criminals living in Britain will be disbanded when funding ceases at the end of March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The future of the Unit is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Fines

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the total number of warrants issued for the non-payment of fines which were issued for the first time by (a) the Central Gateshead magistrates court in 1993, (b) the Central Gateshead magistrates court in 1994, (c) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1993 and (d) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1994; and what is the total number of warrants for arrest for non-payment of fines issued for the second and subsequent time by (i) the Central Gateshead magistrates court in 1993, (ii) the Central Gateshead magistrates court in 1994, (iii) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1993 and (iv) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1994;

(2) if he will list (a) the total numbers of fines issued by (i) the Central Gateshead magistrates court in 1993, (ii) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1993, (iii) the Central Gateshead magistrates court in 1994 and (iv) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1994, (b) the total amounts of fines issued for those periods and by those courts, (c) the total numbers of fines remaining unpaid in those periods and to those courts and (d) the total amount of fines remaining unpaid in those periods and to those courts.

Mr. Maclean: The detailed information requested is not collected centrally but inquiries have been made of the two courts and information is given in the table.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British nationality are currently outstanding for (a) more than one year, (b) more than two years and (c) more than three years; what is the current average length of time taken to process applications; and what were the figures over the previous (i) 12 months, (ii) 24 months, (iii) 36 months and (iv) 48 months.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As at 31 December 1994, the number of applications for British nationality outstanding for more than one year was 9,630 broken down as follows:

	Number
more than one year (but less than two years)	7,717
more than two years (but less than three years)	1,428
more than three years	485

Comparable figures for 1990–1993 are not available. Average waiting times, in months, are shown in the following table:

Hong Kong Citizens

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Hong Kong citizens were granted entry into the United Kingdom (a) temporarily and (b) permanently in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993; and how many Hong Kong citizens he estimates will be granted permanent residence rights in the United Kingdom before 1997.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information on British dependent territories citizens and British nationals (overseas) from Hong Kong given leave to enter the United Kingdom is given in the table. The numbers of such persons accepted for settlement—that is, allowed to stay indefinitely—were 1,590 in 1992 and 1,520 in 1993. No estimates have been made of the corresponding numbers up to 1997.

[1] Seeking, or accepted for, settlement in the United Kingdom.
[2] Some of whom subsequently become eligible to apply for settlement.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are currently being held in detention in police stations in (a) North Yorkshire, (b) South Yorkshire, (c) West Yorkshire and (d) Humberside broken down by (i) police station and (ii) nationality of asylum seeker; how many are being held in total in those areas, broken down by nationality; and what were the figures as at 15 January for each year since 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As at 12 January 1995, no persons who had sought asylum were being held in police cells in North Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire or Humberside. However, five persons who had sought asylum are being detained at Her Majesty's prison, Armley, West Yorkshire consisting of two Indians and one Pakistani, Bangladeshi and Chinese; another one Pakistani was being detained at HMP The Wolds in Humberside. This figure includes people awaiting the setting of directions for removal following refusal of the application, as well as those whose application was under consideration or subject to appeal.

Information on the number of persons who had sought asylum and were detained in these areas on 15 January, in 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1994 is not available.

Calf Exports

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many protestors have been arrested to date at Shoreham in connection with calf exports; and how many have been charged;

(2) what police forces have been involved in policing the current series of protests at Shoreham;

(3) what has been the average number of police officers on duty each night during the current campaign against the export of veal calves at Shoreham;

(4) who took the decision for police officers to wear full riot gear at Shoreham; and what were the reasons stated.

Mr. Maclean: Up to 11 January, 76 people were arrested, of whom 66 have been charged. Sussex police have been aided by the following forces in policing the disturbances at Shoreham; City of London police, Essex police, Hampshire constabulary, Kent county constabulary, the Metropolitan police, Surrey constabulary and Thames Valley police. Since 4 January about 1,000 officers have been deployed on each occasion that lorries carrying calves have driven to the harbour. The decision to deploy officers with public order protective equipment was taken by the chief constable of Sussex on operational grounds.

Immigration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people detained at the behest of the immigration service last year spent more than (a) 24 hours and (b) 48 hours in a police cell; and what was the longest continuous period spent by an individual detainee.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Seamen

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what resources he has allocated for the enforcement of regulations governing the contract employment of seamen on vessels normally plying between two or more United Kingdom ports; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give details of all breaches of the regulations relating to the employment of contract seafarers plying between United Kingdom ports in the last three years.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that regulations relating to the contract employment of seamen on vessels plying between two or more United Kingdom ports and normally not leaving the United Kingdom waters are properly enforced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I have been asked to reply to the third question as well.

Administration of the regulations relating to the employment of contract seamen on board ships plying between United Kingdom ports is a matter for the Department of Employment. However, there is power in the Immigration Act 1971 to enforce the removal of those seamen under contract to join vessels in the United Kingdom who fail to comply with the conditions on which they were given leave to enter or who are reasonably suspected of intending to do so. The immigration service has dealt with 49 seamen under these powers in the past three years.

Specific resources are not allocated by the immigration service to the enforcement of the immigration laws relating to contract seamen.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to discuss with European parties the extension of immigration regulations relating to contract seamen on board vessels plying between two or more member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: None; we have no plans to alter our policy, which is not to require work permits for crews serving on ships on international voyages, including voyages to other member states of the European Union, where the crews are not living in the United Kingdom.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the inter-departmental group on domestic violence will next meet; and what policy decisions arose from the last meeting.

Mr. Maclean: At its last meeting, the ministerial group on domestic violence endorsed proposals in respect of a public awareness campaign on domestic violence, and the preparation of an inter-agency circular to encourage local statutory and voluntary agencies to co-ordinate responses to domestic violence. It also decided that the issue of a centrally co-ordinated policy on refuge provision would be considered further at its next meeting, a date for which will be settled shortly.

Young Offenders Report

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his report on young people and crime following the recent survey of youth lifestyles and self-report offending.

Mr. Maclean: Neither I nor my ministerial colleagues have yet had an opportunity to consider this report, which is still in preparation, but nearing completion. I expect the report to be published later in the year, once it has been finalised and arrangements for its publication agreed.

Voting

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British citizens living overseas are registered for voting in each constituency in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on overseas electors is published in table 1.4 of "Electoral Statistics 1994" published by HMSO—series EL No 21—a copy of which is in the Library.

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the plans of his Department to make information available on Internet and the documents which he intends to be made available on Internet over the next year which will be accessible via the worldwide web server "open.gov.UK" or any specific departmental server.

Mr. Howard: We are considering using the Internet to provide access to information, including in particular published statistics. The option of making this information accessible via the worldwide server "open.gov.UK" will be assessed. Home Office press notices are already available via the Internet from a number of commercial information providers.

Electronic Mail

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to receive and respond to communications via electronic mail.

Mr. Howard: I appreciate that there are great benefits to be derived from the use of electronic mail and its associated technologies. Electronic mail is already used extensively within my Department and its use for communications outside my Department is under review.

Telephone Dialling Codes

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made as to the additional costs which will be incurred by his Department as a result of the changes in national telephone dialling codes next year; and how much this change will cost his Department in additional expenditure.

Mr. Howard: Many of my Department's telephone systems have been converted to cope with the national code change without cost to the Department. For others a charge has been incurred, amounting to about £200,000 across about 300 sites, including executive agencies. Changes to stationery and published material have been incorporated at negligible cost.

Stolen Vehicles

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) to what factors he attributes the fall in stolen vehicle recovery rates between 1992 and 1993;

(2) what information is currently available for the number of stolen vehicles and the recovery rate in 1994; and when the full calendar year figures will be available;

(3) what recovery rate has been achieved in each police authority area for stolen vehicles in 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not yet available for 1994. The next statistics to be published will be for the calendar year 1994 and will be available in the spring of 1995. Figures for 1992 and 1993 are published in table 2.14 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales". It is not possible to attribute the fall in stolen vehicle recovery rates between 1992 and 1993 to any particular factor.

Ethnic Minorities, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce his decisions on applications by local authorities for financial assistance under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 as soon as possible, possibly on a phased basis; when he intends to announce his decision on applications submitted by Bradford council; what representations he has received from local authorities and others for decisions to be announced as a matter of urgency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Well over 800 project applications have been received. The deadline for applications was deferred to 30 December to take account of my right hon. and learned Friend's announcement that the funding available was being doubled. Nevertheless, we hope that it will still be possible to make the outcome known to all applicants in accordance with our original target of the end of February. As available funds have been oversubscribed, decisions could not be taken and announced on a phased basis without prejudicing the position of other bids.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Howard: Of the 366 individuals appointed or reappointed to public positions in the Home Office in the last year, 55 were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Speed Cameras

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many speed cameras have been in operation each year since their inception; how many speeding charges have been made annually as a result of their evidence and what percentage of all speeding charges annually have been made on the basis of evidence from speed cameras, in each police authority.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of speed cameras in operation is not available centrally in the form requested. However, a survey by the Department of Transport in early 1994 stated that 27 speed cameras were in use in England and Wales at the end of 1993.

Information available to me shows that 290 speeding prosecutions were brought in England and Wales in 1992 following evidence produced by automatic cameras and 6,390 in 1993. In addition, 25,767 fixed penalties notices were issued in 1993. Figures for 1994 are not yet available.

The following table shows the proportion of fixed penalty notices and prosecutions resulting from evidence from speed cameras.

Police (Electric Shields and Batons)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what authorisation he has given for (a) the testing and (b) the use of electric shields or electric batons by the police.

Mr. Maclean: None. Chief officers are responsible for deciding what equipment to obtain, and except for the Metropolitan police, where my right hon. and learned Friend is police authority, do not require his authorisation. No chief officer possesses or, so far as the Home Office is aware, is considering the introduction of such equipment for use against people. My right hon. and learned Friend would certainly expect to be consulted about any such proposal. I understand that some chief officers have obtained electric shock equipment to protect officers against ferocious dogs in pre-planned operations.

Police

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have left the service in each of the past 15 years because of (a) retirement, (b) sickness and (c) other reasons.

Mr. Maclean: Detailed information is not available in the form requested. The available data on wastage for the years 1979 to 1989 are contained in the annual reports of HM chief inspector of constabulary. I shall write to the hon. Member with information for the years 1990 to 1993.

Policing, Caerphilly

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future policing arrangements for the new unitary district of Caerphilly.

Mr. Howard: I have consulted the forces, police authorities and local authorities in the area on the future policing arrangements for the new unitary district of Caerphilly. I also asked Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary to report on this issue.

In the light of the replies received and of the professional views of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, I have decided that the Gwent constabulary shall be responsible for policing the whole of the new district from 1 April 1996.

An order will be made in due course, under section 21A of the Police Act 1964—as inserted by section 14 of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994—to give effect to this decision, following discussions with the police authorities and forces concerned on the details of its content.

Disclosure Requirements

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the prosecution are to be required to provide the defence with advance copies of witnesses' statements in summary only proceedings.

Mr. Maclean: I am considering the issues raised by the current disclosure requirements generally, and will take this point into account as part of that consideration.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the costs to the Child Support Agency of employing bailiffs for each of the last two years.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter From Ann Chant to Ms Dawn Primarolo, dated 16 January 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the costs to the Child Support Agency of employing bailiffs.

In accordance with the contract awarded in January 1994, bailiff services are provided at no administrative cost to the Agency.

Strathclyde Flooding

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the most up to date figures in relation to Benefits Agency activity in each parliamentary constituency affected by the floods in Strathclyde during December 1994 for (a) the number of claims for community care grants, (b) the numbers accepted and paid as per claim, (c) the value of grants claimed expressed as (i) a total and (ii) an average, (d) value of grants paid expressed as (i) a total and (ii) an average, (e) the numbers of claims for crisis loans, (f) the numbers accepted and paid as per claim, (g) the value of applications claimed expressed as (i) a total and (ii) an average, (h) the numbers of claims for community care grants refused expressed as (i) a total and (ii) a percentage, (i) the number of claims for crisis loans refused expressed as (i) a total and (ii) a percentage, (j) the number of community care grants reduced from claim as (i) a total and (ii) a percentage and (k) the number of crisis loans reduced from claim as (i) a total and (ii) a percentage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Gordon McMaster, dated 16 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Community Care Grant (CCG) and Crisis Loan (CL) applications received by the Benefits Agency (BA) from people affected by the recent flooding in the Strathclyde area.

BA District boundaries do not correspond with county or local authority boundaries and information relating to Strathclyde has, therefore, been provided for the five BA Districts serving Strathclyde; Renfrew, Glasgow South West, Glasgow Laurieston, Springburn and Cumbernauld, and Glasgow East.

Information relating to the amounts requested and the number of awards made which did not meet the full amounts requested can only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. This is because this information could only be obtained by examining every application made by the flood victims. However, the Districts keep simple separate records relating to applications by the flood victims in respect of the amount paid and category of application. I have, therefore, provided at Annex A and Annex B information on the total number of CCG and CL applications received, the number and amounts awarded and the numbers refused for each District as at 12 January 1995, the latest information available.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average cost of processing a claim for disability living allowance when it goes to appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alex Salmond, dated 16 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the average cost of processing a claim for Disability Living Allowance when it goes to appeal.

Information regarding the overall cost is not available in the exact format required.

Benefits Agency (BA) staff are responsible for preparing an appeal which is then submitted to the Independent Tribunal Service

(ITS). The papers are returned to the BA once the appeal decision has been given. The estimated cost to the BA of preparing an appeal for submission to the ITS is £10.93 per case. This figure does not include the cost to the ITS in hearing the appeal.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Hague: There were four such appointees in the year ended 31 December 1994.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average cost of unemployment benefit and income support for a couple with two children of school age, where there is no other income apart from child benefit, and no capital resources available to them at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Benefit in payment	Average amount £
Unemployment Benefit and Income Support	112.29
Income Support only	115.46
Overall Average	115.04

Notes:
1. School-age children have been assumed to be those between five and 16 years of age. There may be other children included in the benefit unit.
2. Amounts are rounded to the nearest penny and include any Unemployment Benefit paid to the partner in his/her own right.
3. Amounts are derived from the Income Support Statistical Enquiry, February 1994.

Young Carers

Mrs. Golding: To aks the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent research his Department has done into the number of children acting as carers for adults or other children; and what plans there are to do so in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Bowis: I have been asked to reply.

We are currently testing questions in the Office of Population Census and Surveys omnibus survey, to see whether reliable information may be gathered on young carers.

TREASURY

Royal Properties (Tax)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the difference in the tax arrangements in respect of the treatment of (a) Buckingham palace, (b) Windsor castle, (c) Sandringham and (d) Balmoral.

Mr. Nelson: Buckingham palace and Windsor castle are treated as being occupied by the Crown. Both properties comprise domestic and non-domestic accommodation. The domestic accommodation is valued for council tax. Because the Crown is exempt from rating, a contribution in lieu of rates is paid in respect of the non-domestic accommodation.

Sandringham house and Balmoral castle are occupied by Her Majesty in person. In each case, the property is valued for council tax.

Public Limited Companies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to penalise public limited companies which fail to pay their bills promptly.

Mr. Aitken: It is for individual suppliers rather than Government to seek redress from business customers who fail to honour agreed credit terms. There are therefore no plans to introduce any system of penalties. The Government announced a package of measures, in the White Paper on competitiveness in May 1994, to address late payment. One of the measures is the implementation of proposals to require public companies to state their payment policies in the directors' reports.

VAT (Charities)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from (a) hon. Members and (b) organisations outside the House, during the past 12 months relating to making exempt from VAT repairs to public buildings owned or run by charitable organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have received a small number of representations for repair and maintenance to charity buildings to be exempt from VAT. Such an exemption would not be permissible under the EC sixth VAT directive.

Amusement Machines

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations he has had with the British Amusement and Catering Trades Association with regard to the proposed amusement machine licence duty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As announced in the Budget, implementation of this new duty will not take place until November 1995. This will allow Customs and Excise to consult with the trade on the scope and coverage of amusement machine licence duty. I am aware that BACTA is collating information from its members and will be making representations to me in a meeting on 23 January.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the duty on amusement machines is to be imposed on the basis of the number of players per machine; and how he expects the imposition of duty to affect employment prospects within the industry at all levels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The proposals contained in the Finance Bill for the duty on amusement machines provide that the number of chargeable machines equates to the number of simultaneous playing positions. This mirrors the existing provisions for gaming machines. I am meeting representatives of the industry on 23 January and will give careful consideration to any representations they make about employment prospects as a result of the introduction of this new duty.

Blind Persons' Tax Allowances

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have taken place in the blind persons' tax allowances in each year since 1989; what was the cost thereof; and if he will make a statement on his decision in the November 1994 Budget.

Sir George Young: The blind person's allowance is not subject to statutory annual indexation. However, it was doubled in 1990–91 from £540 to £1,080 and further increased to £1,200 in 1994–95. At 1995–96 income levels, the cost of the allowance is expected to be about £3 million greater than if the allowance were available only at its 1989–90 level of £540. Between 1989–90 and 1995–96, the allowance has increased by almost 70 per cent. in real terms.

Investor's Losses

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much compensation has been paid out directly by insurance companies regulated by the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation to investors who have suffered losses in respect of life and pensions business as a result of bad advice and fraud in each year since 1988.

Mr. Nelson: I regret that this information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In the first instance, investors' complaints go directly to the life office involved. Where agreement is reached at this stage, firms are not required to publish details. If agreement cannot be reached, the Insurance Ombudsman Bureau can intervene. The ombudsman does not publish a breakdown of awards made to investors in the form requested.

Value Added Tax (Transport) Order

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that the hon. Member for Wellingborough receives a written reply to the questions he asked the Paymaster General during the debate on the Value Added Tax (Transport) Order on 11 January concerning the Confederation of Passenger Transport's query on exclusive tours and the effect of the sixth VAT directive M/388 EEC on the implementation of the order.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I can assure my hon. Friend that I shall be writing to him in reply to the questions that he asked.

Finance Bill

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect of the Government's proposals in clause 140 of the Finance Bill 1995 on (a) the public expenditure new control total and (b) the total tax revenue in (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95 and (iii) 1995–96.

Sir George Young [holding answer 13 January 1995]: Clause 140 will put right a defect in existing law and does not represent any change in existing practice. The recent "Financial Statement and Budget Report" does not show it as having any effect.

Private Medical Insurance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions the Treasury has had with (a) the Department of Health and (b) representatives of the private medical insurance providers, regarding extending tax relief to all people with private medical insurance.

Sir George Young [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The Treasury receives representations from, and has discussions with, a wide range of organisations with regard to taxation issues. These have included both the Department of Health and representatives of private medical insurance providers.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the principal reasons for the reduction in forecast receipts from the insurance premium tax in 1994–95 and 1995–96 contained in table 4A.1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96" compared with the equivalent figures in table 4.1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994–95".

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Revision to the forecast for insurance premium tax for 1994–95 reflects the decision made after the publication of the 1994 FSBR to change from monthly to quarterly tax returns. This is expected to delay some receipts from 1994–95 into 1995–96. The revision to receipts for 1995–96 is well within likely forecasting error, but reflects a revised view of the likely trend of lower premiums.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the insurance industry in response to the consultations he announced on 29 November 1994 on his proposals to extend the powers of Customs and Excise in connection with the collection of insurance premium tax.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Representations were received from the Association of British Insurers, which represents insurance companies that will account for the vast majority of insurance premium tax. Representations concerned the implementation and application of the tax and they have been taken into account in drafting legislation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cable Franchises

Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the initial cash bid received from each cable franchisee awarded a cable franchise under the Broadcasting Act 1990.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The initial cash bids for the West Kent and the Blackpool and Fylde franchises were £1,600,210.75 and £762,000 respectively.

Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cable franchises have been awarded under the Broadcasting Act 1990 in each year since the Act became law.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Two local delivery franchises have been awarded since the Broadcasting Act became law. Both were awarded during 1994, the first for the West Kent franchise, awarded on 19 May, and the second for the Blackpool and Fylde franchise, on 15 September.

Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much revenue has been derived from cable franchisees in (a) application fees and (b) tender payments in each year since the enactment of the Broadcasting Act 1990.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The application fee for the two franchises which have so far been awarded was £15,000 each. No tender payments have yet been made.

Development Initiatives, Northern Region

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what economic development initiatives his Department has undertaken in the northern region in 1994; and what initiatives are planned for 1995.

Mr. Ian Taylor: In 1994, Government offices began to implement the measures contained in the competitiveness White Paper in consultation with the northern regional business community. In addition, my Department's programmes of assistance continue to operate in the region—for example, regional selective assistance in assisted areas—and a range of economic development projects will be funded through the single regeneration budget. For 1995, the focus will again be on the competitiveness White Paper and establishing full regional business link coverage by the middle of the year. A significant proportion of the region will also benefit from European structural funds as well as the continuation of the full range of other programmes.

Civil Servant Travel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which airlines have been granted preferred carrier status for civil servant travel to overseas destinations.

Mr. Heseltine: The preferred carrier for any particular civil servant's travel will depend on the circumstances of the journey concerned and value for money. My Department has non-exclusive arrangements with British Airways, British Midland Airways, Virgin Atlantic Airways, Cathay Pacific Airways, Sabena Belgian Airlines, Air UK, Manx Airlines (Europe), Teeside Aviation and Air France.

Prison Labour

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action is being taken to control the import of raw materials produced by prisoners or those kept in similar conditions.

Mr. Needham: With limited exceptions, the importation into the United Kingdom of any goods produced in any foreign prison or like establishment is banned by the Foreign Prison Made Goods Act 1897, as amended in 1988. Enforcement is a matter for HM Customs and Excise, which is dependent on receiving sufficient evidence, specific to the consignment concerned, of prison-made origin.

Inward Investment, Northumberland

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what role his Department has played in assisting inward investment by Taiwanese manufacturing companies in Northumberland.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department has provided regional selective assistance grants to the following projects:

(i) £8.25 million to Europa Magnetics Corporation of Cramlington to create 550 new jobs manufacturing floppy disks;

(ii) £250,000 to Synpac Chemicals Ltd. of Bedlington to create 57 jobs manufacturing chemicals; and

(iii) £90,000 to Lite-On Ltd. of Ashington to create 85 jobs manufacturing customised power supply components for electrical and electronic equipment.

In addition, my Department is working closely with the Northern Development Co., the local authorities, Northumberland training and enterprise council and others to provide a full aftercare service to all inward investors in the county, including those of Taiwanese origin.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Deva: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of companies which are founded in the United kingdom go bankrupt within two years.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is not available.

Professional Football

Ms Hoey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider setting up an inquiry into the trading and competition practices within professional football.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Under competition legislation, responsibility for considering and, if appropriate, investigating allegations of anti-competitive behaviour lies with the Director General of Fair Trading in the first instance. If the hon. Member has any evidence of business practices within professional football which may merit investigation under competition legislation, she should pass the evidence to him.

Biotechnology

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department spent supporting academic research into the applications of biotechnology in the last year for which figures are available; and what proportion of the total public research and development budget this represents.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

Some £102 million was spent supporting academic research into biotechnology by the research councils in 1992–93. This was 1.9 per cent. of the total public civil and defence research and development budget.

EDUCATION

Higher Education Students

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total number of full-time students in higher education in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is shown in the table:

Full-time higher education student enrolments (all domiciles) in England—1989 to 1993

Nursery School Places, Northumberland

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many nursery school places are currently available in Northumberland.

Mr. Forth: Information on the number of nursery school places is not collected centrally. The number of pupils being taught in maintained nursery schools in Northumberland local education authority in January 1994 was 128.

Primary Schools, Northumberland

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the total number of pupils on school rolls and the pupil-to-teacher ratio in primary schools in Northumberland for each year since 1988 to 1994.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the table.

Pupils and pupil: teacher ratios in maintained primary schools in Northumberland LEA 1988–94

1988	19,382	22.8
1989	19,168	22.5
1990	19,505	23.0
1991	19,468	23.5
1992	19,710	23.2
1993	20,131	23.8
1994	20,243	24.3

[2] Including the full-time equivalent of part-time teachers.

Free School Meals

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils in the Northumberland education authority from families currently on income support or the family credit scheme will be entitled to free school meals.

Mr. Robin Squire: Only income support entitles pupils to a free school meal, although there is cash assistance within family credit. On census day in January 1994, the number of pupils known to be eligible for a free school meal in maintained schools in Northumberland education authority was 7,950—15.4 per cent. of day pupils.

Grants for Education Support and Training

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what amount of GEST funds was available at the original introduction of the national curriculum; and what amount is available to local education authorities now;

(2) if she will list the amount of GEST funds allocated to each education authority at the original introduction of the national curriculum and for each subsequent year.

Mr. Forth: The GEST programme in 1988–89, when the national curriculum was introduced, supported LEA expenditure of £322.5 million, of which £9 million was for activities related to the national curriculum. In 1995–96, the GEST programme will support LEA expenditure of £251 million, of which £40.1 million will be for national curriculum related activities. The Department pays grant on this expenditure at the rate of 60 per cent. in most cases.

This information sought for each education authority for each year since 1988–89 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

General National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list by individual school and further education college in England the total budget allocated to each participating institution to fund GNVQs in each year since 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not available to the Department. The great majority of the funding allocated to schools and colleges by local education authorities, the Further Education Funding Council and the Funding Agency for Schools is unhypothecated and total funds for the support of GNVQs are not therefore identified separately.

As part of the GNVQ part 1 pilot scheme announced by the Minister of State on 21 December, 118 schools will receive specific support for part 1 GNVQ in 1995–96 under the Government's GEST programme or through other special grants. A table concerning the allocations made for individual schools has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what resources were specifically allocated in order to fund general national vocational qualifications in schools and further education colleges in England in each year since 1990; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Under the Government's specific grant programmes, the following allocations have been made for vocational qualifications since 1990–91. Since 1992–93, these have focused on GNVQ support in schools, following the introduction of GNVQs in September 1992.

Year	£ million
1990–91	2.0
1991–92	2.1
1992–93	3.0
1993–94	5.5
1994–95	5.2
1995–96	13.3

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between her departmental Ministers and agencies.

Mr. Forth: In the case of the Department's one next steps agency, the Teachers' Pensions Agency, the respective responsibilities of the Secretary of State and the chief executive are set out in the agency's framework document of 1 April 1992, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Residential Care Pupils

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils in residential care are excluded from local authority schools in (a) Kirklees, (b) in all Yorkshire council areas and (c) nationally.

Mr. Forth: This information is not available centrally.

State Nursery Schools, Leeds

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of (a) three-year-olds and (b) four-year-olds were attending state nursery schools in Leeds in each year since 1985.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is shown in the table.

Percentage of pupils aged 3 and 4[1] in maintained nursery schools in Leeds LEA 1985–94

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment her Department has made of the differential growth rates across colleges of further education; what measures she has taken or intends to take in order to reform the method of funding further education colleges in England; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council has developed a new funding methodology after wide consultation; its proposals gained a high degree of acceptance. The new methodology was introduced for the academic year 1994–95. Refinements to the methodology, and examination of information about the sector to assess the sufficiency and adequacy of further education provision, are matters for the council.

Student Loans

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students are eligible to apply for student loans; and how many receive mandatory grants.

Mr. Boswell: In 1993–94, there was estimated to be around 752,000 students who were eligible to apply for a student loan in England and Wales, compared with a figure of around 688,000 in 1992–93. In 1992–93, the latest year for which information is available, there were 666,100 mandatory award holders in England and Wales. The coverage and conditions of eligibility for student loans differ from those for mandatory awards.

Pre-school Provision

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many three and four-year-olds there are in nursery classes, nursery schools or primary reception classes for each local education authority; and what percentage this represents of the population in those age groups in January 1994.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information about the number of pupils under five years of age being taught in maintained nursery and primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1994 is shown in the table.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many of the individuals appointed by her Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Boswell: In the past year, six individuals appointed by the Department to public bodies had been first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Adult Literacy

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, if the Government have concluded their review of the adult literacy and basic skills unit; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Government have concluded their review of the adult literacy and basic skills unit. I am writing today to the chairman of ALBSU, Mr. Peter Davis, to inform him of our conclusions.

The basic skills of literacy and numeracy are fundamental to the United Kingdom's future competitiveness. Too many people have inadequate basic skills for the modern world. ALBSU plays an important role in tackling that problem.

Earlier this year, ALBSU published proposals in its document "Making it Happen" that it should be redesignated as a general basic skills unit with a wider remit. ALBSU argued that this would allow the unit to develop a more coherent national basic skills strategy and tackle the problem of poor basic skills more effectively.

In the light of ALBSU's proposals, and of the Government's review of the unit's effectiveness and efficiency, the Government have decided that ALBSU should remain as an independent basic skills unit funded by the Department for Education and the Welsh Office, but working closely with the further education funding councils and the Further Education Development Agency.

We have also decided that ALBSU's remit should be extended so that it becomes a more general basic skills unit, with responsibilities extending to basic skills training in the workplace, for the unemployed, for young people and between generations.

These decisions represent a vote of confidence in ALBSU. They also demonstrate the Government's commitment to improving the basic skills of the whole population, as part of our broader commitment to achieving the national targets for education and training.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 17 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

The Prime Minister: Recommendations for appointments are made from a number of sources. It is not practicable for my Office to detail those first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Strathclyde Floods

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to visit the victims of the Strathclyde floods.

The Prime Minister [holding answer Monday 16 January 1995]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Local Government for Scotland visited the victims of the flooding, on my behalf, on 12 December 1994 and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland made a private visit on 27 December 1994.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney-General how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

The Attorney-General: No such appointments have been made in the last year.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between the next steps agencies and Ministers.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The division of responsibilities and the relationship between the chief executive of an agency and the Minister in charge of the Department is set out in the individual agency's framework document. A copy of the framework document for each of the 102 agencies now in existence is available in the Library of the House.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between his departmental Ministers and agencies.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The division of responsibilities and relationship between Ministers and agencies in my Department is set out in the framework document of each agency. Copies of these framework documents, a number of which are undergoing review at present, are in the Library of the House.

Executive Agencies

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, if he will set out the principal division of the annual budgets of each of the next steps agencies for each year since their formation.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Information on the budgets of each of the next steps agencies can be found in their published annual accounts, which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within their parent Government Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. David Hunt: These are matters for individual departmental Ministers and their agency chief executives.

Agencies operate within the framework of demanding quality standards and tight control of civil service running costs and other financial targets, as set out in the White Paper "The Civil Service—Continuity and Change", Cm 2627. In the usual way, their expenditure is subject to audit by the Comptroller and Auditor General. As tasks are delegated to agencies, staff in departmental headquarters previously performing the task are reduced. Staff in agencies remain, of course, civil servants—total civil service manpower has reduced at the same time as more next steps agencies have been established. The record of agencies in improving effectiveness and efficiency in government is summarised in the "Next Steps Review 1994", Cm 2750.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: One.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Subsidiarity

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the instances since the treaty of Maastricht when the principle of subsidiarity has been applied to Community decisions.

Mr. David Davis: The principle of subsidiarity applies to all Community decisions. Article 3b of the Maastricht treaty makes this clear, as do the conclusions of successive European Councils since Lisbon in June 1992, and the October 1993 inter-institutional agreement.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the instances when Her Majesty's Government have sought to have the principle of subsidiarity applied since the ratification of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. David Davis: We examine closely the subsidiarity implications of all Community decisions, and have done so since long before the Maastricht treaty entered into force. The incorporation of subsidiarity into article 3b of the treaty and the undertakings by the Council, Commission and the European Parliament in the 1993 inter-institutional agreement to ensure that subsidiarity checks form an integral part of their internal procedures have helped to entrench subidiarity further into all Community business.

Caribbean

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy to encourage incremental constitutional development suited to the needs of each territory in the dependent territories in the Caribbean.

Mr. Baldry: Our policy is to consider constitutional development in the light of the needs of individual dependent territories and ourselves, but such development is subject always to the good government of the territories concerned.

Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of an increase in the allocation of financial resources to the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our policy is to seek to restrict the annual increase of the budgets of international organisations to zero real growth. In the case of the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe, we distinguish between administrative and operational expenditure. Administrative expenditure should be subject to ZRG. Operational expenditure is more difficult to foresee and requires more flexible treatment, although it, too, must be cost-effective.

Since the end of the cold war, the OSCE has increased its activities in conflict prevention and crisis management. These include OSCE missions presently operating in eight OSCE countries and an expansion of the preventive diplomacy work by the Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights and the High Commissioner on National Minorities. We fully support these activities.

The United Kingdom delegation to the OSCE plays an active role in the negotiation of the OSCE's annual budget and ensuring value for money.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Goodlad: The number of individuals appointed in the last year by this Department who were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit are as follows:

Foreign and Commonwealth Office
None
Overseas Development Administration
One (1)

Iran

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the compatibility of FCO sponsorship of a seminar organised by the Society for Contemporary Iranian Studies on the political economy of contemporary Iran at the School of Oriental and African Studies, London, on 18 and 19 January with present Government policy towards Iran; and what is the estimated cost of the seminar to public funds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our support for the forthcoming conference on Iran is in line with our policy of critical dialogue with Iran. This conference is aimed at promoting understanding of the Iranian economy and strengthening academic and economic contacts with Iranian professionals. We are contributing £1,500 towards conference costs.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council which private Members' Bills in the current parliamentary Session have been or are being drafted by the Office of Parliamentary Council, wholly or in part; and on whose instructions the drafting is or has been undertaken in each case.

Mr. Newton: To date, Parliamentary Counsel has provided drafting assistance for the following Bills on the instructions of the Departments shown and acting on the authority of Ministers.

Insurance Companies (Reserves) Bill (Trade and Industry)
Charities (Amendment) Bill (Home Office)
Proceeds of Crime Bill (Home Office)
Road Traffic (New Drivers) Bill (Transport)
Olympic Symbol Etc. (Protection) Bill (National Heritage)
Dogs (Fouling of Land) Bill (Environment)
Prisoners (Return to Custody) Bill (Home Office)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council what would be the current value of the financial assistance available to private Members for the drafting of balloted bills if it had been increased in line with inflation since its introduction.

Mr. Newton: A resolution of the House in 1971 authorised the payment of up to £200 to hon. Members securing one of the first 10 places in the ballot for private Members' Bills, to assist in the cost of drafting. The equivalent sum at 1994–95 prices would be £1,454.

Laptop Computers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee if he will request a copy of the report of the California Senate into the use of laptop computers for hon. Members in the House and Chamber; and if he will make a statement on whether a similar scheme could be analysed by his Department for implementation in the Commons.

Mr. Waller: I understand that the computer officer has requested a copy. I shall ask him to circulate it to the Committee when it is received, and to inform the hon. Member.

Upper Waiting Hall Exhibition

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Shaftesbury Society to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 27 March to Friday 31 March 1995.

ENVIRONMENT

Fire Services

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will review the standard spending assessment formula in respect of the Staffordshire fire services;

(2) what was the standard spending assessment formula relating to fire service work for (a) inland and (b) coastal fire service authorities relating to fire service work for (i) 1992–93, (ii) 1993–94, (iii) 1994–95 and (iv) proposed for 1995–96.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We are considering representations from local authorities about the proposed settlement for 1995–96, including one dated 6 January 1995 from Staffordshire county council, which asks for a change to the proposed methodology on the fire element of SSAs.

The same formula is used for inland and coastal authorities. The formulae for 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 are published in part 4 of the local government finance report for the relevant year and for 1995–96 in the draft local government finance report 1995–96.

House Renovation Grants

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses in Lewisham are in a condition which would qualify them for repairs or renovation grants; and what is the average cost per household of such grants.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My Department has not made estimates of numbers of properties which would qualify for renovation grants in individual London boroughs. Qualification depends both on the condition of the property and the circumstances of the owner.

The London borough of Lewisham commissioned the Lewisham private sector house condition survey in 1993. This estimated that 9,500 private homes—14 per cent.—in the London borough of Lewisham did not meet current fitness standards. It does not estimate how many of these homes would qualify for renovation grants if their owners applied, or the cost of such grants.

Mandatory renovation grants made by the local authority to households in Lewisham in 1994–95 are expected to average around £12,300 each, while discretionary minor works grants are expected to average around £600 each.

Blyth Valley

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent on industrial investment and environmental improvements by the northern development company in the Blyth Valley constituency in each year since 1989.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

Nil. The Northern Development Co. is essentially a promotional organisation co-ordinating inward investment activities in the region.

Damping Grant

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what damping grant is allocated to Nottinghamshire county council in (a) actual and (b) real terms; and what level in each case is allocated to the average shire council.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: "Damping" or SSA reduction grant was introduced in 1994–95 to assist local authorities which experienced a reduction of more than 2 per cent. in their standard spending assessment as a result of the revision of SSA methodology in 1993 or by the incorporation of 1991 census data. No county council experienced such changes and none therefore received SSA reduction grant. Nottingham city council did and received £1.146 million in 1994–95.

Under the proposed settlement, reduction grant in respect of the changes in 1994–95 will continue to be paid in 1995–96 with an increase in the threshold for payment up to a further 2 per cent. to 4 per cent. The amount of SSA reduction grant that Nottingham city council will receive under the proposed settlement is £348,000.

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what redundancies have been made at the Building Research Establishment; what plans he has for the future of the centre; what assistance is provided by the centre to developing countries; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: There have been no redundancies at the Building Research Establishment.

The establishment's policy and resources framework is under review; this includes consideration of whether executive agency status is the most appropriate basis for BRE's future operations. My right hon. Friend will make a statement in due course.

I have asked the chief executive of BRE to write to the hon. Member about the establishment's work in developing countries.

Letter from R.G. Courtney to Mr. George Foulkes, dated 13 January 1995:

BRE ASSISTANCE TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

The Minister for Construction has asked me to reply to the part of your Parliamentary Question which concerns the assistance BRE provides to developing countries. This currently takes various forms which I outline below.

Research and associated advice

Medium-term programmes of research, carried out over a period of three years or so, have addressed many issues relevant to construction in developing countries. They are normally funded by the Overseas Development Administration (ODA) and often includes joint research undertaken with organisations in developing countries. A current ODA-funded programme is demonstrating the value of energy-efficient refurbishment of domestic apartments in China. In this, we are working with the Chinese Academy of Building Research. BRE recently concluded a project on low-cost housing in Malaysia carried out with the Universiti Sains Malaysia and the University of Wales. This was partly funded by ODA, with further assistance from the British Council.

Commissions

BRE receives commissions, often through ODA or other aid agencies but sometimes directly from the countries concerned, to undertake short-term research-based work to meet specific needs. Examples of this during 1994/95 have included assistance to the timber industry in Honduras, and to the Ministry of Construction in Vietnam. We have also assisted developing countries establish their own building research organisations. For example, BRE advised the Ministry of the Interior in Taiwan on the development of its Building Research Institute, and now continues to provide advice and training to the Institute, at present in fire research and testing.

Attached workers

BRE has 'attached workers' from developing countries, for periods of training or to gain research experience. The enclosed BRE Overseas Information Paper explains the scheme. At any time there are usually two or three attached workers at BRE. They are generally in receipt of a scholarship from an aid agency or from their own government.

Advice to enquirers

Provision of advice to enquirers from developing countries is funded by ODA at a cost in 1994/95 of nearly £20k Enquiries are usually concerned with the design of low cost housing and community buildings, the use of alternative building materials and the principles of construction suitable to withstand natural forces such as earthquakes and hurricanes. They are replied to individually, but are often answered by sending an Overseas Building Note. This series of publications has been funded by ODA although no funds are currently available for its development.

Distribution of research reports

BRE distributes a limited number of free copies of research reports, and other publications to similar organisations in developing countries, usually on an exchange basis but sometimes as gifts to develop international co-operation.

International collaboration

In its main programmes, BRE collaborates with universities and technical institutions from many countries, including developing countries. For example, BRE has an agreement with the Sichuan Institute of Building Research in China, under which the Institute assists BRE by carrying out a small programme of masonry research under a sub-contract.

In total, BRE received £141k from ODA programmes in 1993/94.

I hope this information will be helpful; please let me know if you would like me to expand on any aspect of our work.

River Quality

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many rivers in Britain were found not to be conforming to the basic European standards of hygiene in the last year for which information is available; and if he will list them.

Mr. Atkins: No rivers in the United Kingdom are subject to European Union hygiene standards.

Charging (Water and Sewerage)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the expected date when he will announce his decision on the future charging arrangements for water and sewerage.

Mr. Atkins: In due course.

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between his departmental Ministers and agencies.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible for six executive agencies: Ordnance Survey; the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre; Security Facilities Executive; Building Research Establishment; the Buying Agency; and the Planning Inspectorate. The division of responsibilities and relationship between the Secretary of State and each of these agencies is set out in their respective framework documents. Copies of these documents are available in the House of Commons Library.

BATNEEC

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 1104, if he will qualify what constitutes BATNEEC, best available techniques not entailing excessive costs; when his Department first instigated this acronym; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Chapter 7 of the "Integrated Pollution Control: A Practical Guide", available in the Library of the House, provides guidance as to the meaning of BATNEEC. Guidance is issued by the Secretary of State and the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution as to BATNEEC standards for industrial processes falling within the local authority air pollution control and integrated pollution control systems respectively. The acronym derives from section 7 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, but has its origins in the concept of best practicable means first set in national legislation in the Alkali Act of 1874.

Regeneration Funding

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total resources made available to (a) Nottingham city council and (b) Nottinghamshire county council for regeneration in each of the last five years by central Government programmes.

Mr. Curry: The following resources were made available to Nottingham city council and Nottinghamshire county council specifically for regeneration purposes in each of the last five years:

In addition, the county council has received approval to £14.21m European regional development funds over the five-year period.

Desulphurisation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the number of days in 1993 and 1994 that power generation desulphurisation plant was switched off.

Mr. Atkins: Drax and Ratcliffe-on-Soar are the only two power stations fitted with flue gas desulphurisation equipment; installation of FGD at these stations is still in progress.

The first two FGD units at Drax have been operational since February 1994. From then until the end of 1994 they have operated for 98 per cent. of the time that the boilers to which they are linked were operating. The FGD units were off-line for the remainder of the time primarily due to a shut-down for a planned inspection.

The first FGD unit at Ratcliffe-on-Soar has been operational since March 1994. From then until the end of 1994 it has operated for 95 per cent. of the time that the boilers to which it is linked were operating. The FGD unit was off-line for the remainder of the time for inspection work and running repairs-fault rectification.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by power station the funds received from the European Economic Community for desulphurisation plant.

Mr. Atkins: I am not aware that the two generating companies in England and Wales have received any such funds.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which coal-burning power stations currently have desulphurisation plants.

Mr. Atkins: At present, flue gas desulphurisation equipment operates, or is under construction, for 4 GW of capacity at National Power's Drax power station and for 2 GW of capacity at Powergen's Radcliffe-on-Soar power station.

Dog Fouling

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the recommendations of the advisory group on litter concerning dog fouling; and what is his response.

Sir Paul Beresford: The recommendations of the litter advisory group concerning dog fouling were published as a consultation document on 20 July 1994. The Government's response was set out in the reply by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside to my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Sir G. Bright) on 14 December 1994, Official Report, column 664.

Tyne and Wear

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made with the creation of an enterprise zone in the catchment area of the former Swan Hunter's shipyard following the Minister for Industry's statement to the House on 12 May 1993, Official Report, columns 801–809.

Sir Paul Beresford: Progress on proposals for new enterprise zone sites on Tyneside has been necessarily delayed during the period of uncertainty over the future of the Swan Hunter shipyards. The three local authorities concerned and the Tyne and Wear development corporation have now submitted a package of sites for consideration and this is being examined by the Government Office for the North East.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of a new enterprise zone in Tyne and Wear on (a) the work of the existing city challenge projects in inner west Newcastle and North Shields and (b) employment levels in the former shipbuilding communities of east Newcastle and Wallsend.

Sir Paul Beresford: No decision has been taken on the sites to be included in the proposals for a new enterprise zone in Tyne and Wear. As soon as agreement is reached, the relevant planning authorities will be asked to submit detailed economic analyses of their proposals.

Water Supply Disconnections

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many domestic properties had their water supply disconnected in Walthamstow in 1994; and how many of these were in properties which had water meters.

Mr. Atkins: Information on disconnections by local authority district and by charging method is not available centrally. The Director General of Water Services publishes information on disconnections twice a year, by water company area and by domestic and non-domestic customer. Information on disconnections in the six months to 30 September 1994 was published in an Ofwat news release on 15 November 1994, a copy of which is in the Library.

Erosion Review

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his review of erosion, deposition and flooding in Great Britain.

Sir Paul Beresford: It is expected that the review of erosion, deposition and flooding in Great Britain, commissioned by my Department, will be published in May 1995.

Civil Servant Travel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which airlines have been granted preferred carrier status for civil servant travel to overseas destinations

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department has not granted preferred carrier status to any airline.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the absenteeism rate for the Building Research Establishment in each year since 1991.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information available is:

Year	Proportion of working days lost through sick absences per cent.
1992	2.0
1994	2.1

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the absenteeism rate for the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre in each year since 1991.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of staff employed	Number of sick days
1991	67	268
1992	66	[1]582
1993	64	[1]356
1994	64	[1]314

[1] These figures are distorted by the following individual sick records:

Year	Number and reason	Days
1992	1—Depression	124
	1—M.E.	106
	1—Pregnancy problems	98
1993	1—Heart bypass	119
1994	1—Depression	80

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the absenteeism rate for the Security Facilities Executive in each year since 1991.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Security Facilities Executive was established as an executive agency in October 1993. In its first year of operation the average sick absence rate to the nearest whole number of days was eight per person.

Geevor Tin Mine

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the pollution threat caused by the flooding of Geevor tin mine in Cornwall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The National Rivers Authority has monitored closely the level and quality of water in Geevor mine. In its view, the water now flowing from the mine has had a localised and limited impact, and is easily dispersed by the coastal waters.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who currently owns and has responsibility for maintaining Geevor tin mine in Cornwall.

Mr. Atkins: The surface freehold of Geevor mine is owned by Cornwall county council. I understand that the underground workings of the mine were abandoned in 1991.

Dog Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been made to him since the 1992 general election in favour of the introduction of a dog registration scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department regularly receives representations on this issue. For example, in response to the advisory group on litter recommendations on dog fouling last year, we received 104 letters which supported the idea of dog registration.

However, the Government's view has consistently been that dog registration would be bureaucratic and difficult to enforce and that the irresponsible owner would be very unlikely to register. Dog control legislation related to specific problems, as in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and elsewhere, is, we believe, the most appropriate way of tackling these issues.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Sir Paul Beresford: No central record is maintained of the sources of names of appointees and in some cases they may have been nominated from more than one source. However, from the information readily available, it appears that three of the individuals appointed during 1994 were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Albert Dock Development

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to visit the Merseyside development corporation to investigate complaints by residents about the Albert dock development; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have no plans to visit the Merseyside development corporation for this purpose.

I am aware of the concerns of the residents of the Albert dock on some points and have written to the hon. Member. The corporation is continuing to work with the residents, long leaseholder and developer to find a way to resolve problems. In particular, the MDC has liaised with the leaseholder and the residents on the question of the unsatisfactory windows and is hoping to set up a meeting with the two parties on the other issues. A meeting between the developer and the residents has also enabled progress to be made on the question of the further development of residential accommodation.

Grand Regatta Columbus

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he plans to take with respect to the chairman and chief executive of the Merseyside development corporation following the publication of the third report of the Committee of Public Accounts of Session 1994–95, HC 94, on the grand regatta Columbus.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have no plans to take action. I have every confidence that the chairman and chief executive of the Merseyside development corporation will take the necessary action to address the shortcomings in financial management highlighted in the PAC report. Indeed, they have been co-operating with the Department to that end since the publication of the NAO report on the grand regatta Columbus and fanfare for a new world concert in March 1995.

Council Tax

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the impact of a significant event affecting the valuation of properties on valuation of properties for council tax purposes.

Mr. Curry: For council tax purposes, all dwellings are allocated to valuation bands according to the price that they might reasonably have been expected to have fetched had they been sold, subject to certain assumptions, on 1 April 1991. The listing officer will be prepared to review the banding where there has been a change in the physical state of its locality, for example where a major new road is opened, which has the effect of reducing the value of the dwellings in that area. The impact of such a "significant event" on the housing market will, of course, vary from case to case.

TRANSPORT

Merchant Navy Veterans

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement in respect of travel, accommodation and light refreshment expenses payable to Merchant Navy veterans for 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The extent of future funding for Merchant Navy representatives on Remembrance Sunday has not yet been decided, but the Department will continue to meet reasonable travel and subsistence costs incurred by MN wreath layers.

Selby Bypass

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many objections have been identified to the draft compulsory purchase orders for the projected Selby bypass; what public inquiry proceedings are expected in relation to the objections received; and when the inquiry will be held.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Michael Alison, dated 17 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the draft Compulsory Purchase Order for the proposed A63 Selby Bypass scheme.

To date, 10 objections to this draft Order have been received. Arrangements are being made for these to be dealt with, along with the 14 objections to the draft Supplement Side Roads Order, at a Public Inquiry starting on 30 May this year.

I hope this is helpful.

Roads

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of (i) motorway and (ii) trunk roads are currently (a) open, (b) under construction, (c) at the planning inquiry stage or (d) under active consideration as part of the roads programme either (1) as new motorway-trunk road or (2) as existing motorway-trunk road being widened; if he will identify in each case the location and parliamentary constituency; which projects will now be subjected to further review arising out of his response to the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment report; and what new assessment will be used.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information, which covers England only, is in the following table:

		Miles of motorway	Miles of all purpose trunk road
a) Open		1,905	9,465
b) Under construction (Start of works to completion)	New	59	24
	Widening	14	89
c) Planning Inquiry Stage (Orders Published to Start of Works)	New	30	43
	Widening	193	55
d) Under active consideration as part of the Road Programme	New	99	798
	Widening	598	176

The location of schemes in the national road programme is shown in the "Trunk Roads in England 1994 Review" published by my Department in March last year. Copies are in the Library of the House.

I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to send the hon. Member details of the parliamentary constituencies in which those schemes fall. A copy of those details will be placed in the Library.

All schemes at the planning stage will be reviewed against the guidance issued to the Highways Agency with the Government's response to the SACTRA report.

Rail Track Sale (London)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was raised from the sale of rail track from the area south-west of London Underground Leyton Central line station; what organisation received the profits from the sale; what has happened to the proceeds of the sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The Secretary of State is acquiring by compulsory purchase land and rights over land to the south-west of Leyton underground station extending to some 12 acres of former railway land in and around the Temple Mills area. Negotiations over the terms of purchase and compensation settlement continue.

Double-decker Buses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what EC regulations apply to the manufacture and use in the United Kingdom of double-decker buses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Road Vehicle (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 require certain systems and components in vehicles to comply with the performance requirements of EC directives or United Nations Economic Commission for Europe regulations. We are currently awaiting an EC proposal for a draft directive on bus and coach construction.

A15 (Telephones)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when work to install emergency telephones on the A15 Barnetby Top-Humber Bridge section will commence; and when it will be completed.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Michael Brown, dated 17 January 1995:

John Watts, the Minister for Roads and Railways, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about when work will begin, and be completed, to install emergency telephones on the A15 between Barnetby Top and Humber Bridge.

Work will start at the end of January and will take four weeks, subject to good weather.

Commercial Vehicles (Safety)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many commercial vehicles were stopped and inspected; how many were found to be defective; and how many of those defective had defective brakes in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Vehicle Inspectorate agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 17 January 1995:

Vehicle Spot Checks

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of commercial vehicles stopped and inspected, how many were found to be defective and how many of those defective had defective brakes in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

The information requested is not available by calendar year and has been provided for the financial years (April to March) 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94 and is shown in tabular form below.

Number of Vehicles Inspected during Roadworthiness Spot Checks

	Heavy goods vehicles	Trailers (HGV)	Buses and coaches
1991–92	90,118	22,565	21,106
1992–93	100,337	26,033	24,895
1993–94	93,690	26,645	24,521

The inspections above revealed that the following number of vehicles had serious roadworthiness defects which resulted in prohibition action being taken.

Number of immediate and delayed roadworthiness prohibitions

	Heavy goods vehicles	Trailers (HGV)	Buses and coaches
1991–92	14,075	3,557	2,552
1992–93	14,678	3,354	2,289
1993–94	14,888	3,882	2,419

The number of these vehicles inspected during roadworthiness spot checks, which had defective brakes, is not available for these inspections alone or in the form requested. The information available, provided below, shows recorded brake related defects as a percentage of all defects recorded from prohibition notices. The data is taken from roadworthiness spot check inspections and roadworthiness inspections done for operator licensing purposes. Data for 1991/92 is not available.

	Heavy goods vehicles per cent.	Trailers (HGV) per cent.	Buses and Coaches per cent.
1991–92	n/a	n/a	n/a
1992–93	30.5	42	19
1993–94	32.5	43	19

The information on inspections does not include:

(i) roadworthiness enforcement activity on light goods vehicles; and

(ii) limited roadworthiness spot checks confined to vehicle lighting or exhaust emissions.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to remove any commercial vehicles found to have defective brakes from the roads (a) for three months for the first offence, (b) for 12 months for a second offence and (c) confiscation for the third offence by the same owners/operators.

Mr. Norris: No. Sanctions are properly a matter for the courts and the traffic commissioners.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Marine Safety Agency will complete its survey of those ports which have facilities to accept chemical contaminated waste; if he will list the ports so designated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 17 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about ports which have facilities for accepting chemical contaminated wastes.

The Marine Safety Agency has a policy of constantly reviewing the provision of waste reception facilities at ports. This is in part to meet our commitment to ensure that the facilities are adequate under the International Convention on the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, know as MARPOL. The Department of Transport is also assessing the provision of facilities to assist in the development of measures following the recommendations in Lord Donaldson's report into the prevention of pollution from merchant shipping "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas".

At the moment we have two surveys in hand: a questionnaire survey of the types and capacity of reception facilities and an independent assessment of the adequacy of those facilities. The responses from the questionnaire survey were received in late 1994 and are currently being analysed. We also hope that the team of consultants carrying out the second assessment will have finalised their reports shortly. I will send you personal copies of both reports when they are available.

Vehicle Checks

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he currently assesses the roadworthiness of cars, heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles; and what plans he has to vary the present requirement for the production of MOT certificates as a prerequisite for the purchase of vehicle excise duty tax discs.

Mr. Norris: Vehicles are assessed for roadworthiness at annual tests. They are also checked at the roadside by the police and examiners from the Vehicle Inspectorate.

I have no plans to change the current check of MOT test certificates when vehicles are relicensed.

Concessionary Travel, London

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to impose a concessionary travel scheme for pensioners and disabled people across London for the coming year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: None. The provision of travel concessions for elderly and disabled people is a matter for the London local authorities. I understand that the boroughs have agreed a scheme for London Transport services for the coming year, but are still considering the arrangements for London rail services.

Wrightington Hospital Mobility Centre

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funding assistance his Department will give to the accredited mobility centre at Wrightington hospital in Lancashire when its grant from the regional health authority ends.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport mobility advice and vehicle information service has provided support to the mobility centre at Wrightington over a number of years through loans of vehicles and equipment and the services of its peripatetic driving adviser. The Department has no means to provide funding assistance.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Norris: Two.

Cones Hotline

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest calculation of the total number of calls to the cones hotline that (a) required the removal of cones and (b) did not justify action; and what was the total loss of cones hotline.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 17 January 1995:

You asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest calculation of the total number of calls to the Cones Hotline that (a) required the removal of cones and (b) did not justify action; and what was the total cost of the Cones Hotline.

As this is an operational matter for the Highways Agency, I have been asked to reply.

The Cones Hotline has currently received 12,100 calls since its inception in June 1992. Of these, 6,100 cases have been complaints about observations on cones and traffic management at roadworks which have been followed up by the relevant regional office. As a consequence of this follow up action, there have been 5 cases where it has been necessary to remove the traffic management. The remaining calls have comprised general enquiries and requests for information which have been dealt with immediately.

Since March 1994, the Cones Hotline has operated on a dedicated local call rate number. The cost of running the Cones Hotline is approximately £5000 per annum, including call charges. Other running costs are not separately identifiable since they have been, and are still being, met from within budgets agreed before the Hotline was established.

I hope this information is helpful.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Speeding

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for controlling excessive speeding by vehicles along the Shore road, Ballyhalbert; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: The Department is not aware of a speeding problem at Shore road, Ballyhalbert where a 30 mph speed limit exists. However the matter will be brought to the attention of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, which is responsible for enforcing speed limits.

RUC

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number and names of the groups and organisations which are to be consulted by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland with regard to changes in the structure of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and what is the estimated cost of this exercise.

Sir John Wheeler: This is a matter for the Police Authority for Northern Ireland. However, I understand that, in pursuit of its statutory obligation to make arrangements for obtaining the views of people about policing, after consulting the Chief Constable the authority wishes to give as many individuals, community groups and organisations as possible the opportunity to have their say about future policing needs and priorities in Northern Ireland. Accordingly, the authority plans to provide information about the consultation exercise to each household in Northern Ireland. Accordingly, the authority plans to provide information about the consultation exercise to each household in Northern Ireland and to invite views from political and religious groupings, business and trade union organisations, justice, peace, legal, community, sporting, social, charity and youth bodies. Including newspaper advertisements, printing and postage, the cost of the project is estimated at £70,000. The authority is seeking responses by 2 May 1995.

Eggs

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the expected impact of the compulsory user of heat-treated feed on Northern Ireland egg production; whether the Northern Ireland Egg Producers Association was consulted prior to the decision to make this feed compulsory; whether the use of heat-treated feed is compulsory for egg production in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the future prospects for the Northern Ireland egg industry.

Mr. Ancram: There is an additional cost in the use of heat-treated feed. Although some egg producers are concerned about possible adverse effects on egg quality, this has not been substantiated in the experimental work carried out by the Department of Agriculture. A significant number of egg producers in Northern Ireland are using heat-treated feed successfully.

The heat treatment requirement was introduced in 1991 following consultation with the egg and poultry industry to protect the industry against the introduction of Newcastle disease through a feed source. The Northern Ireland Egg Producers Association was not in existence at the time.

The use of heat-treated poultry feeding stuffs is not compulsory in Great Britain.

The Northern Ireland egg industry, which has a reputation for producing quality eggs, can maintain its position on the export market and look forward with confidence to the future.

Maze Prison

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firearms are under the control of prisoners at Her Majesty's prison at the Maze; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: None.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners at Her Majesty's Maze prison have access to mobile telephones; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: Prisoners are not permitted mobile telephones. There are reports about the supposed availability of mobile telephones in HMP Maze and these are subject to investigation and regular searching procedures.

Industrial Development Board

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new jobs have been provided in the boroughs of (a) Ards and (b) Castlereagh in each of the past five years as a result of assistance from the Industrial Development Board; and when the IDB last arranged a visit to each of these boroughs by a potential inward investor.

Mr. Ancram: Information on jobs promoted with assistance from the Industrial Development Board in the Ards and Castlereagh district council areas is set out in the table. The last visit by potential inward investors, arranged by IDB, was on 15 September 1994 in the case of Ards district council and on 14 December 1994 to Castlereagh district council area.

AIDS

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have died as a result of AIDS or illness associated with AIDS in each of the past five years.

Mr. Moss: The number of persons known to have died in Northern Ireland as a result of AIDS, or illness associated with AIDS, in each of the past five years is given below:

1992: 4

1993: 3[1]

1994: 5 (provisional)

Cattle

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current number of cattle aged 30 months or under with enzootic bovine leucosis; what the figure was 12 months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: None. There has never been any recorded outbreaks of enzootic bovine leucosis in Northern Ireland. In 1991 Northern Ireland was recognised as an EBL free region of the EC.

Civil Servants

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants are employed by the Northern Ireland Office (a) in Stormont and (b) in Whitehall.

Sir John Wheeler: The number of civil servants employed by the Northern Ireland Office on 30 December 1994 was 1,556.

Of this total, 486 are employed in Stormont, 104 in Whitehall and the remainder at other locations throughout Northern Ireland.

Terrorists (Educational Background)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies have been carried out by his Department into the educational attainments of persons convicted of terrorist-type crimes in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: It is not normal practice to conduct general studies of prisoners' attainments regardless of their convictions. However, the prior educational attainments of individual prisoners are assessed when they are being advised about the opportunities available to them during their imprisonment.

Records of examination results achieved in prisons are included each year in the annual report of the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Vehicle Registration Numbers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the ranges of the vehicle registration numbers in Northern Ireland which have not been issued; what arrangements he has made for the sale of those numbers; when he now expects to dispose of them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: Registration marks in the following series have not been issued:

Marks 1 to 99 in each of the following series:

ABZ, BBZ, BDZ, CBZ, DBZ, DDZ, DUI, EDZ, FDZ, FIL, GDZ, IIW, IXI, JJI, JIW, JXI, KIB, KJI, KXI, LIB, LJI, LXI, MIB, MXI, NXI, OXI, WIJ, XIJ, CDZ, JIB, YIJ.

Marks 1 to 999 in each of the following series:

AAZ, BAZ, CAZ, DAZ, EAZ, EBZ, EUI, FAZ, FBZ,GBZ, GIL, GUI, HBZ, HUI, IBZ, IDZ, IIL, JBZ, JDZ, KBZ, KDZ, KIW, LDZ, LIW, MDZ, MIW, MJI, NDZ, NIB, NIW, NJI, OIB, OIW, OJI, PIW, PDZ, PIB, PJI, PXI, RDZ, RIB, RIW, RJI, RXI, SDZ, SIB, SXI, TIB, TJI, TXI, UIB, UXI, VIB, VXI, WIB, WXI, XXI, YXI.

Marks 1 to 1999 in the following series:

JIL, HIL, LIL.

The series FUI and KIL were not issued since it was considered that their use might give rise to offence.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland—the agency with responsibility for the registration of vehicles in Northern Ireland—is considering the administrative arrangement, including the need for legislation, which would be required to enable these marks to be offered for sale to the public. I hope to be in a position to make an announcement in a few months about the introduction of a sale of marks scheme in Northern Ireland.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 25 November 1994, Official Report, column 403, what percentage of total admissions was represented by emergency hospital admissions.

Mr. Moss: The information is as follows:

Year	Emergency admissions as a percentage of total admissions
1989–90	45
1990–91	42
1991–92	40
1992–93	37
1993–94	37

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Sir John Wheeler: None of the individuals appointed to public positions in the last year was first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Stormont (Fire)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the cost of repairing and restoring the Parliament buildings, Stormont; when he expects the work to begin and end; and if he will ensure that the building will be repaired to the standard existing before the fire of 2 January.

Mr. Moss: No estimate has yet been taken about the restoration of the former House of Commons Chamber. I will, however, be reviewing options in the light of prevailing circumstances.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the fire and smoke detection equipment installed in the Parliament buildings, Stormont, and whether any fire suppression or control equipment including sprinkler systems were in place; what was the distance between the building and the nearest fire hydrant; and if he will make a statement on the fire of 2 January.

Mr. Moss: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Gentleman the Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson) on 13 January, Official Report, columns 235–36.

Road Deaths

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have died in road accidents in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years; in each year how many were (a) pedestrians, (b) drivers, (c) motor cyclists, (d) car passengers, (e) car drivers, (f) heavy goods vehicle drivers, (g) heavy goods vehicle passengers and (h) others; and in regard to each such category how many of the deaths were attributable in some degree to (i) alcohol, (ii) speed and (iii) not wearing a seat belt.

Sir John Wheeler: It is not possible to state whether or not fatalities are attributable in any degree to failure to wear a seat belt. Seat belt usage information for fatalities is provided for information.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Swimming Teaching

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what guidelines he has issued in respect of minimum levels and standards of swimming teaching in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

Detailed advice on safe practice in the teaching of swimming is included in the handbook "Safe Practice in Physical Education" which was first published in 1985 by the British Association of Advisers and Lecturers in Physical Education. A revised edition of the handbook was published in 1990 with the approval and recommendation of the, then, Department of Education and Science.

The advice includes details about recommended teacher/tutor qualifications, supervision, pupils' behaviour, pool safety and equipment.

Precise teaching methods are a matter for individual schools, and it is for schools to satisfy themselves that those who teach swimming are suitably qualified.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will visit James Brindley high school and Tunstall swimming pool to discuss the operation of the standard spending assessment formula applied by the Department of Environment in respect of the teaching of swimming to school children.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage nor I has any immediate plans to visit this school or swimming pool. The Government have set the overall totals for local authority spending in a way which allows all authorities to increase their spending in 1995–96. But each council is solely responsible for determining its spending priorities between and within services, in deciding the amount to be spent on schools swimming.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what assessment he has made of the teaching resources required to ensure adequate levels of swimming teaching for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools;

(2) what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Environment to ensure adequate provision is made for swimming teaching in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

Surveys carried out by this Department have shown a considerable commitment from schools and local education authorities to swimming in schools. Implementation of national curriculum physical education began in August 1992. However, because of the difficulty which some schools might have had in providing swimming tuition, the implementation of the swimming requirements of the PE curriculum were deferred until August 1994. This allowed those schools which needed it another two years to make the arrangements necessary to provide swimming tuition.

Second World War Commemoration

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how he proposes to fund the programme of events in Hyde park, from 6 to 8 May, to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end in Europe of the second world war.

Mr. Dorrell: During the current financial year it will be necessary to make payments to Messrs Unusual Industries, which has been contracted to provide the specified service. Consultancy payments will also be made to a programme project manager. Parliamentary approval for this new service is being sought in a supplementary estimate for the Department of National Heritage vote for film, tourism, sport and broadcasting—class XI, vote 5.

The associated costs of the Department's support team will be met from the Department of National Heritage administration vote—class XI, vote 7—within existing provision.

National Lottery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the charities that have so far benefited from the Government share of the national lottery.

Mr. Dorrell: No applicants, including charities, have yet received funding from the proceeds of the national lottery. The proceeds will remain invested until the distributing bodies are ready to pay grants to good causes.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with Camelot plc on measures to ensure that the operation of the national lottery reflects the policy of equal validity of the Welsh and English languages; if he will make it his policy to ensure implementation of the policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This is a matter for the Director General of the National Lottery. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his response in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

GP Fundholding

13. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to encourage more general practitioner practices to become fundholding.

Mr. Malone: We have recently announced a major extension of the options for general practitioner fundholding. Our aim is to extend the benefits for patients as widely as possible.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 December 1994, Official Report, column 401, if she will now publish information for 1993–94 on general practitioner fundholders' savings.

Mr. Malone: Final audited information is not yet available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total administrative costs of general practitioner fundholding in 1991–92, 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 13 January 1995]: General practitioner fundholding practices receive additional allowances for directly managing their funds and purchasing care on their patients' behalf. These costs represent about 2 per cent. of budgets set and amounted to £14.1 million in 1991–92, £29.5 million in 1992–93 and £49.5 million in 1993–94. Figures for 1994–95 are not yet available.

It is not possible to disaggregate other administration costs from total costs.

Patient Services (Charges)

14. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those trusts that are charging for television use and other patient services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Guy's Hospital

15. Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received concerning the proposed closure of Guy's hospital accident and emergency unit.

Mr. Malone: South East London health authority is currently consulting on future services at Guy's and St. Thomas's hospitals and all representations received by the Department have been passed to SELHA to be taken into account.

Patient Treatments, North West Region

16. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS patients were treated in the north-west region in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the figure in the previous year.

Mr. Sackville: The number of finished consultant episodes in the general and acute sector purchased by the national health service for patients from the former north-western region was 782,000 in 1993–94 compared with 748,000 in 1992–93—an increase of 4.5 per cent.

Ward Running Costs

17. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are estimated to be the respective costs of running the average (a) single sex and (b) mixed ward; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available. The cost of maintaining a bed for a patient depends more upon the specialty than on the sex of the patient. However, when properly used, mixed-sex accommodation can lead to a more efficient use of hospital beds, and better quality care for patients.

NHS (Private Sector Involvement)

18. Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to further involve the private sector in the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Government welcome cost-effective co-operation between the national health service and the independent sector. NHS managers and general practitioner fundholders are encouraged at a local level to seek improved quality, better value for money and best use of resources, irrespective of whether it is from the public or private sector. Such co-operation is to the advantage of patients and the NHS.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health

if she will make a statement on her Department's plans to contract with the private sector to design, build and run district general hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for local decision.

Capitation Funding Formula

19. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to issue a simplified explanation of the new needs-driven formula of capitation funding for health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: A booklet entitled "HCHS (Hospital and Community Health Services) Revenue Resource Allocation: Weighted Capitation Formula" has been placed in the Library. It gives a simplified explanation of the modified weighted capitation formula.

Hospital Trust Boards

20. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the criteria for appointment to hospital trust boards.

Mr. Malone: Non-executive directors of national health service trusts are appointed for their personal qualities and the knowledge and skills which they can bring to the post and not to represent any particular body or interest.

District Health Authorities

21. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of district health authorities in England; what was the number in March 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: There are 110 district health authorities in England. In March 1991 they numbered 189.

The reduction in the number of district health authorities is part of our programme for achieving more effective and efficient health authorities which link primary and secondary care, for streamlining management structures and improving the health of the population.

Health Services, Northumberland

22. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the provision of health services in south-east Northumberland; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the Northumberland health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chief executive, Mrs. J. Axelby, for details.

Health Information

23. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken to improve the provision of information on health matters for NHS patients and the wider public.

Mr. Malone: The patients charter sets out the right of every citizen to be given information on local health services, including quality standards and maximum waiting times. In January 1993, a national freephone health information service was launched which puts callers in contact with their local regional health information services. The service can be contacted free of charge on 0800 665544. It provides information in confidence about local national health services; patients charter standards and waiting times; common diseases, conditions and treatments, including details of self-help groups; how to complain about NHS services; and how to maintain and improve personal health. Health authorities produce annual reports for the public on hospitals' patients charter performance, and hospitals publicly display information to patients about their services, including their own patients charter performance, and a named person to whom complaints should be made. In June 1994, the first set of annual NHS comparative performance tables were published, showing the public how their local health services were performing under six main headings based upon patients charter information.

In addition, NHS trusts are required to publish an annual report and accounts, which includes information about the principal activities of the trust together with details of any activities in research and development with a comparison with that of the previous year. Recent measures have been taken to increase the information published in this document and from 1994–95, the report will include information on the trusts performance against a number of local-national patients charter standards.

NHS Waiting Times

24. Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the average NHS waiting time since March 1988.

Mr. Malone: The average waiting time for hospital treatment has fallen from 9.2 months in March 1988 to 4.6 months in March 1994.

29. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS patients are seen (a) within five weeks and (b) within three months; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: In 1992–93, the latest year for which information is available, 56 per cent. of national health service patients admitted to hospital were admitted within five weeks, and 73 per cent. within three months.

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to make further progress in reducing the amount of time patients have to wait for hospital treatment.

Mr. Malone: The national health service has already made huge strides in reducing waiting times. In all but a handful of cases no one now waits more than two years for treatment, and the average waiting time has been cut from over nine months in 1987 to less than five months now. We expect to see further progress and from 1 April 1995 the maximum length of wait for in-patient or day case treatment for all patients will be reduced from 24 to 18 months. We will also introduce two new standards—a maximum waiting time of 12 months for patients waiting for coronary artery bypass grafts and some associated procedures and also, for the first time ever, a standard for the maximum wait for a first out-patient appointment.

Blood

25. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate has been made by her Department of the current shortfall in blood stocks at the present time.

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority has sufficient stocks to meet the needs of hospitals for blood at the present time.

27. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to make a decision about the future of the blood transfusion service.

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority has announced that it will ask an independent panel consisting of Professor A. Bellingham, president of the Royal College of Pathologists; Professor A. Breckenridge; Professor in Pharmacology, university of Liverpool; Dr. H. Gunson; previous medical director, National Blood Authority; and Mr. P. Griffiths; director, King's Fund college, to ensure that the authority, in coming to its final decisions, has given due and objective consideration to the comments received during its recent consultation. The authority will publish its final proposals in due course.

Alzheimer's Disease

26. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what her Department's policy is on meeting the needs of younger people with Alzheimer's disease; and if he will make a statement.

These arrangements are being repeated for 1995–96 and local authorities have been asked to provide evidence of joint strategies to address any operational problems which have been identified. Arrangements in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to provide additional funding for the Cheviot and Wansbeck trust; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Health Education Budget

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was her Department's budget for health education in each of the last five years; and what is the projected budget for the next three years.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 January 1995]: Expenditure on health education falls to a number of budgets. Apart from funding for the Health Education Authority in 1994–95—to date, £36,984,000—and expenditure on health education publicity campaigns run by the Department, there is other, unquantifiable, expenditure on a variety of services and programmes which involve elements of health education, run by health authorities, trusts and other agencies.

Insulin

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's assessment of the qualities and advantages of human and animal insulin, respectively.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The assessment of the qualities and advantages of human and animal insulin is a matter for the clinical judgment of individual doctors.

WALES

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many intensive care beds there are in each of the health trusts in Wales.

Mr. Richards: At 30 June 1994—the latest date for which information is available—the number of staffed beds allocated to intensive care was as follows:

	Number
NHS Trusts:
Bridgend and District NHS Trust	9
Carmarthen and District NHS Trust	3
East Glamorgan NHS Trust	6
Glan Clwyd General Hospital NHS Trust	6
Glan Hafren NHS Trust	7
Gwynedd Hospital NHS Trust	7
Llandough Hospital NHS Trust	5
Morriston Hospital NHS Trust	7
Nevill Hall and District NHS Trust	6
Pembrokeshire Trust	3
Swansea NHS Trust	9
Wrexham Maelor Hospital NHS Trust	6
Other Health Units:
Merthyr/Cynon Health Unit	4
UHW/CRI Group of Hospitals	22
West Glamorgan East Health Unit	7

Source:
QSI return.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to provide the resources for more intensive care beds in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: It is for individual health authorities and hospitals to agree on its provision of intensive care beds in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Greenfield Bypass

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Clwyd county council to discuss funding of the Greenfield bypass, A548; and if he will make a statement with regard to his view on a start date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. His officials meet regularly with the county council to discuss potential transport grant schemes.

It is for Clwyd county council to take forward the scheme.

Dobshill Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of Dobshill hospital, near Buckley, Clwyd.

Mr. Richards: The future of Dobshill hospital is a matter for the Clwyd health authority and the Clwydian Community Care NHS trust at this stage.

Schools (Information Technology)

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to develop information technology in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: We have undertaken a substantial programme of investment in information technology in both primary and secondary schools. Under the grants for education support and training programme, it is estimated that £1.9 million will be spent in 1994–95, and expenditure of a similar amount is planned for 1995–96.

Developing a sound knowledge of information technology and its implications is an essential part of children's education. Information technology is, therefore, a compulsory element of the revised national curriculum for all pupils aged five to 14 in maintained schools in Wales. It will also be a common requirement, for all subjects, that pupils should be given opportunities, where appropriate, to develop and apply their information technology capability in their study of all national curriculum subjects.

North Wales Police Force

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has been given by the North Wales police force and by Gwynedd and Clwyd county councils concerning the reduction in the number of police officers in North Wales which will follow from the budget for 1995–96 which has been provided for the North Wales police force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Mr right hon. Friend the Under-Secretary met a deputation from the North Wales police authority on 20 December. The authority estimates that it will have to make a reduction of 60 officers in 1995–96 on the basis of the provisional police settlement. I am considering the representations made by the authority and I will announce my final settlement decisions at the end of January.

Community Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will increase the budget of the Clwydian community trust to enable it to meet its overall commitments with specific reference to the responsibilities it has for community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The Clwydian community NHS trust secures its income through contracts negotiated with commissioning health authorities.

Meadowslea Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of Meadowslea hospital, Penyffordd, Clwyd.

Mr. Richards: The future of Meadowslea hospital is a matter for the Clwyd health authority and the Clwydian community care NHS trust at this stage.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Redwood: One. The Public Appointments Unit holds a register of candidates for appointment nationally. The Welsh Office maintains its own register of candidates for public appointment to which people interested in appointment to bodies in Wales may apply.

Trans-European Rail Network

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which Welsh rail links are included in the proposed trans-European network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The European Commission's proposal for a trans-European transport network, as currently drafted, includes the following railway lines:

Holyhead–Crewe

Aberystwyth–Shrewsbury–Wolverhampton–Birmingham

Fishguard–Cardiff–London

The Government have proposed to the Commission a number of additional rail lines. These include:

Clarbeston Road–Milford Haven

Whitland–Pembroke Dock

Newport–Hereford–Shrewsbury–Crewe

Cardiff–Birmingham

Local Government Code of Conduct

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the relevance for councils in Wales of the code of conduct for local government employees published by the Local Government Management Board.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for individual local authorities to decide whether they wish to adopt the code of conduct for local government employees.

South America (Trade Links)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to encourage Welsh trade links with south American countries.

Mr. Redwood: The economies of south America are now potentially attractive markets for Wales-based companies, with Argentina and Chile providing a broad range of opportunities. The Welsh Office intends to organise a trade mission there in May this year.

Brynglass Tunnels Scheme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of the reasons for every delay in the work on the Brynglass tunnels scheme and the explanation of the hiatus planned between its completion and opening.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is commercial in confidence between the parties to the contract. However, main delays were caused by the discovery of contaminated fill at Glebelands, service diversions at the Harlequin and the collapse of a cofferdam in the River Usk.

The A4042 section of the scheme is expected to be opened to traffic in a few weeks' time. The contractor has advised that the remaining works should be completed in the summer of 1995.

Non-Christian Pupils

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the schools he has visited in the past year in which a substantial proportion of their pupils were from families of non-Christian faiths.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally.

Lobbying Organisations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to eliminate the use of lobbying firms by local authorities and in support of all communications to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have made it clear to my department that if a local authority asks to meet me via a Member of Parliament, I or a Welsh Office Minister will usually see it. There is no need to employ a lobbying firm. I want local authorities to concentrate on providing services for their taxpayers.

A483 (Pool Quay)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a speed limit on the A483 trunk road at Pool quay, Powys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 December 1994]: My Department has again considered a reduction in the national speed limit at Pool quay. It has been concluded that the effective way forward is to continue to try to reduce speeds by improving the driver's perception of the developed area. Additional signing and road markings have recently been provided but further traffic management measures are being considered.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus Stocks

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made since the publication of Cmnd. 6003—"Membership of the European Community-Report on Renegotiation"—in discouraging the creation of surplus stocks and enacting measures to discourage surplus production of milk products and cereals; and what was the tonnage of surplus stocks in 1974 and 1993 together with the annual cost of storage and the losses incurred on their disposal for export or industrial use.

Mr. Jack: Since 1979, the common agriculture policy has seen a number of changes, including, in 1984, the introduction of milk quotas. The other most notable change was the 1992 CAP reform agreement, which was a major development in moving the CAP closer to the market and reducing dependence on intervention. The agreement included significant reductions in support prices for major commodities and other measures to cut excess production, such as a limit to the total arable area eligible for direct support, coupled with a requirement to set land aside, and livestock premium quotas.

Tables showing levels of all produce held in intervention within the EU, including cereals and milk products, are deposited in the Library of the House monthly, most recently on 5 December. The information currently held in the House Library goes back to January 1985. Figures for earlier years were not prepared on the same basis.

The budgetary cost of intervention in the cereals and milk sectors which would include storage costs and losses on resale, for the years 1974, EC9 and 1993, EC12 are:

	1974 mua	1974 £ million	1993 mecu	1993 £ million
Cereals	323.6	163.6	2,724	2,142
Milk products	342	168	294	231

Exchange rates:
1974: 1 ua = £0.491712
1993: 1 ecu = £0.78627

Telephone Dialling Codes

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment has been made as to the additional costs which will be incurred by his Department as a result of the changes in national telephone dialling codes next year; and how much this change will cost his Department in additional expenditure.

Mr. Jack: The amendments to our telephone exchanges required as a result of the code changes have been made by the maintainers free of charge with the exception of five small exchanges that required total expenditure of approximately £3,500. Changes will also be required to ancillary items such as stationery, signs and fax machines. No information is available centrally on the cost to change these items, but they are being managed within existing budgets.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has that the spread of bovine tuberculosis is caused by badgers.

Mrs. Browning: Experimental control areas in Dorset and Gloucestershire, set up in 1975, provided evidence of the causal link between infection in badgers, and cattle herds. After removal of the badgers, there were no further cattle TB herd breakdowns in these areas for many years. Two independent reports, by Lord Zuckerman in 1980 and Professor Dunnet in 1986, concluded from the evidence obtained under laboratory conditions at the Central Veterinary Laboratory and from the field that badgers can and do harbour bovine tuberculosis and represent a potential threat to cattle. All cattle tuberculosis breakdowns are the subject of detailed epidemiological investigation by MAFF veterinary staff. These show that badgers are implicated in at least three quarters of cattle herd tuberculosis breakdowns in south-west England.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many badgers he estimates have been culled as a result of bovine tuberculosis in each of the last three years (a) in England and (b) in Nottinghamshire.

Mrs. Browning: The number of badgers killed in Ministry removal operations as a result of bovine tuberculosis in England in the last three years is as follows:

1993: 1,094
1994: 1,674

None of these operations took place in Nottinghamshire.

Veal Products

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to require all veal products to be labelled according to the method of production.

Mrs. Browning: No. The food advisory committee considered the question of labelling relating to methods of production during a wide-ranging review of food labelling and advertising practices, which it conducted in 1990. The committee did not recommend imposing any requirements to indicate animal rearing methods on food labels and the Government have accepted this advice. This does not prevent the voluntary inclusion of such information, providing it is true and not misleading.

Enzootic Bovine Leukosis

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current number of cattle aged 30 months or under with enzootic bovine leukosis; what was the figure at 31 October 1993, and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The information on the number of animals under the age of 30 months confirmed as being infected with enzootic bovine leukosis is not available, but the number would be low as infection has been confined in a total of only 90 animals on 33 premises since October 1992, of which 29 animals were found on 10 premises since 31 October 1993. It is often not possible to classify young animals as either infected or not infected until they are at least two years of age, by which time many of the animals which might be suspected of being infected have been slaughtered.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Jack: Our officials regularly consult the public appointments unit for names of suitable, qualified candidates for public appointment. Of the appointments made by my right hon. Friend in the last year, 13 were made from names supplied by the unit.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he now has to prevent Albert Hall Farms from exporting calves.

Mrs. Browning: We have no such plans. The powers available to prevent the transport or further transport of animals can be applied in circumstances where breaches of the legislation are disclosed in respect of particular consignments.

DEFENCE

Redundancies

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing the cash sums allocated for (a) civilian and (b) military redundancies in each service in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98; what additional annual costs will fall to his Department in each of those years as a result of accruing superannuation liability changes associated with the early payment of lump sum benefits and annual pension payments to redundant service personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The costs of service redundancies and those civilian redundancy costs which fall to my Department will be met from within the planned defence budget totals announced on 29 November 1994. Those plans contain some £220,000,000 in 1995–96 and £310,000,000 in 1996-97, more in real terms—at 1993–94 prices—principally to meet the costs of service redundancies which I announced in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 870. No additional costs will fall to the defence budget in the years in question to meet the costs associated with the early payment of lump sum benefits and annual pensions to redundant service personnel.

Aircraft (Falling Materials)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of all incidents in the past three years in which stores, weaponry, equipment or other material have unintentionally fallen from military aircraft in flight.

Mr. Soames: Full details of all incidents could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Excluding inadvertent weapons releases inside range areas, however, the total number of incidents involving inadvertent releases of stores, weaponry, equipment and other material in the past three years is 310.

RAF Leuchars

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the visit of three Danish F16 aircraft to RAF Leuchars from 12 to 14 December 1993; which RAF unit hosted the exchange visit; how many sorties were flown by the aircraft on each of the days of their deployment; and how many of these were at low level.

Mr. Soames: The aircraft deployed to RAF Leuchars, which hosted the visit, to conduct low flying training. Following their arrival at the station on 12 December, no sorties were flown that day. Five sorties were flown on 13 December, none of which were booked at low level. The aircraft departed on 14 December and, as the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces made clear in his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 389, to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson), flew part of their sortie without authorisation within the United Kingdom low flying system. Details of that incident were passed to the Royal Danish air force for appropriate action.

Military Aircraft (Birds)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many collisions have occurred between military aircraft and birds within five miles of the wildfowl and wetlands trust site at Caerlaverock, Dumfries, within the last five years; what species of bird was involved in each incident; and what was the altitude at which each collision occurred.

Mr. Soames: Although my Department's computerised aircraft incident records do include details of all reported birdstrikes by service aircraft, they are not held in a form that would allow easy retrieval, and the information requested could therefore be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Harry Mills

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will de-classify and publish the report of the Deputy ARP Controller Newport on the death of Harry Mills aged 12 in Newport, Gwent, on 2 January 1943.

Mr. Soames: My Department does not hold a copy of this report.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the safety of the decontamination and re-use of all sites used during the 1939–45 war for the storage of and exercises involving chemical weapons; when each site was last inspected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: During world war two there were a large number of sites concerned with the development, production, storage and testing of chemical weapons. Sites which were subsequently disposed of were checked to ensure no residual chemical contamination was present. It has not been possible to identify when each of these sites was inspected, but there is no evidence to suggest that there have been any subsequent contamination problems. We are aware of our duty of care responsibilities and thus sites remaining in my Department's ownership are subject to review to ensure there is no risk to the public.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will de-classify and publish full details of all reports of wartime casualties of civilian and military personnel attributed to mustard gas and other chemical weapons poisoning.

Mr. Soames: My Department holds no central collation of information on such incidents. Medical records relating to individuals are at present withheld from the Public Record Office as medical in confidence.

Second World War Secret Documents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will arrange for all previously secret reports on Britain during the second world war that are now available for public inspection in the United States to be de-classified in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: In accordance with the initiatives set out in the White Paper on open government, Cm 2290, my Department, in common with other Government Departments, has been re-examining records closed for more than 30 years. To date, more than 6,500 such records have been released, most covering the events of the second world war. Not all the material now de-classified in the US has survived in British archives.

Civil Servant Travel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which airlines have been granted preferred carrier status for civil servant travel to overseas destinations.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has not granted preferred carrier status to any airline.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Soames: Although the Cabinet Office's Public Appointments Unit may be consulted for appointments to a range of MOD or MOD sponsored public positions, nominations may also be made from a variety of other sources. Additionally, candidates are sought through various professional and group organisations. My Department does not maintain central records about the means by which individuals were nominated or identified for such appointments.

Crown Housing Trust

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the total cost to his Department of establishing the Crown housing trust to manage MOD service quarters; and if he will make a statement about its future;

(2) how many people are employed by the Crown housing trust; and what has been the total cost in salaries to its employees since its inception.

Mr. Soames: Work has been under way in my Department since 1991 on new arrangements for the married quarters estate, at a total cost to date of some £5 million. This figure includes salary costs, to the end of November 1994, of approximately £160,000 for eight staff initially recruited for a housing trust and now engaged on setting up the defence housing executive, as announced by the Secretary of State for Defence on 17 November 1994, Official Report, column 1.

David Hart

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the possibility of conflict of interests arising by his employment of Mr. David Hart as his special adviser in relation to his Department's plans for married service quarters; whether Mr. Hart has played any role in the development of the plans for married service quarters or has seen them; and what interest Mr. Hart has shown in the purchase of married service quarters.

Mr. Freeman: Mr. David Hart, as special adviser to my right hon. Friend, is one of several independent advisers who have contributed to the development of plans for the married quarters estate. His involvement has been, and continues to be, very productive. The need to ensure that there is no conflict of interest in the involvement of advisers in the next phase of the privatisation of the married quarters estate is fully recognised; this will be subject to the provision of formal undertakings.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to dispose of the vacant dwellings currently owned by his Department.

Mr. Soames: Not all vacant dwellings are surplus to our requirements. The majority are undergoing or awaiting major maintenance, held for future deployments, or form part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available for entitled service families. However, empty properties which are surplus to requirements are sold. Properties which are not surplus to long-term requirements but which are not needed immediately for service families are, wherever possible, leased to local authorities, housing associations or civilians.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for the implementation of the United Kingdom's obligations under article VI of the 1968 treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Soames: We are committed to work towards nuclear disarmament in the context of general and complete disarmament, and have played and continue to play an active role in a wide range of non-proliferation and arms control negotiations. We have also reduced our holdings of nuclear weapons, eliminating our surface maritime and ground tactical capability and substantially reducing our stockpile of nuclear free-fall bombs.

Electro-shock Batons

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what stocks of electro-shock riot batons his Department possesses; and what tests his Department have conducted on electro-shock riot batons.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if electro-shock riot batons were part of the Al-Yamamah arms deal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No electronic shock weapons have been supplied under the Al-Yamamah programme.

Faslane

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether changes were made to the safety plans for the Faslane nuclear site following discovery of seismic problems; what was the total cost of these changes; and when they were carried out;

(2) what frequency his Department assumed when planning the Faslane nuclear site for earthquakes measuring 0.2 G or more horizontal ground acceleration;

(3) what steps his Department took to ensure that appropriate (a) seismic surveys and (b) geological structure surveys were conducted in the planning stage of the Faslane nuclear site;

(4) what technical changes were made to the shiplift facility for the Trident system at Faslane following lessons learnt from the Chernobyl nuclear reactor explosion; and what was the total cost of these changes;

(5) what is the maximum horizontal ground acceleration that the Faslane nuclear site is able to withstand from an earthquake.

Mr. Freeman: Safety plans for the Clyde submarine base, Faslane, are kept under continuous review and amended as necessary in the light of all relevant information. During the planning stage of the Trident support facilities at Faslane, a number of geotechnical reports on the site were commissioned on behalf of the Ministry of Defence from distinguished academics and other experts. These included one specifically on geology and seismicity. Planning also drew on the British Geological Survey's national database of fault lines and seismic events. The support facilities were designed in accordance with the relevant national standard, namely, that a reactor plant must be capable of being shut down and maintained in a safety shut down condition following an earthquake of a severity with a probability of occurrence not exceeding one in 10,000 years. For Faslane the design peak horizontal ground acceleration of such an earthquake is 0.2 G. In the event, the Ministry of Defence achieved a more demanding criterion for the shiplift in the light of developments in United Kingdom civil practice which had followed the Chernobyl incident.

It is not possible to identify separately the financial effects of the changes in the design of facilities during planning and construction nor of past and prospective refinements to safety plans.

EMPLOYMENT

City Challenge

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the unemployment figures for each area which successfully bid for city challenge (a) at the time the bid was accepted and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on claimant unemployment in those local authority areas and wards which are covered by the city challenge scheme can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Redundancies (Walthamstow)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies were notified in Walthamstow in each of the past five years.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is not available.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) prosecutions and (b) enforcement actions were taken by the Health and Safety Executive in each year from 1980 to 1994 against employers who have imposed on their employees excessive working hours or shift patterns in contravention of section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974.

Mr. Oppenheim: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the policy of refusing travel claims for income support recipients who have applied for positions of less than one year in duration.

Miss Widdecombe: The rules of the travel-to-interview scheme have been reviewed recently and the Employment Service is at present testing changes to the scheme in its north-west region. One of the changes is a more flexible approach to the rule that the prospective job must be expected to last for more than a year. However, this relaxation does not include seasonal jobs, or very short-term temporary jobs.

If the test shows that the changes are effective and can be paid for within the resources available, we would hope to introduce the revised scheme nationally in the autumn.

Disabled People

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled (a) men and (b) women in the Doncaster and Mexborough area were registered unemployed (i) at the last date for which figures are available and (ii) on the same date for each of the previous four years.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on the number of disabled people claiming unemployment-related benefit is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Occupational Asthma

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking following the findings of Professor Anthony Newman on the relationship between the amount of workplace exposure to respiratory sensitisers and the development of occupational asthma.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive was aware of the emerging findings of Professor Newman Taylor's research when it launched its "Breathe Freely" campaign last April. The campaign focuses on preventing occupational asthma by raising awareness of the dangers of respiratory sensitisers and reminds employers of their duty under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 to control exposure to these substances. The results of Professor Newman Taylor's research, which was jointly funded by HSE and the National Asthma Campaign, underline the message of the "Breathe Freely" campaign: controlling exposure to respiratory sensitisers will reduce the prevalence of occupational asthma.

Gas Explosions

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will commission a report on gas explosions since mid-December.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive has been investigating four separate incidents since mid-December 1994. Any lessons to be learned will be discussed as a matter of urgency with British Gas and will be more widely available under the terms of the Health and Safety Commission's policy of openness.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the percentages of youth training leavers (a) nationally and (b) in London obtaining full qualifications at NVQ levels, 1, 2, 3 and 4 or their equivalents; and what is the percentage obtaining no qualification for each of the years since 1990 for which data are available.

Mr. Paice: The information requested is given in the following tables. Information on qualifications in Scotland is available only on a comparable basis up to 1992–93.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of jobs gained and lost since 1972, as a result of Britain's membership of the EEC.

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 7 December 1994, Official Report, column 218.

Northern Region

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the enhanced range of labour market help to those affected by the closures referred to by the Minister for Industry in his statement on 12 May 1993, Official Report, columns 801-809, as being provided by the Tyneside training and enterprise council and local employment service following the receivership of Swan Hunter Shipbuilders.

Mr. Paice: Tyneside training and enterprise council and the local employment service provided a range of additional job search assistance and training opportunities following the receivership of Swan Hunter Shipbuilders. This included:

advice and guidance on retraining, further and higher education, self-employment and resettlement assistance, leading to appropriate employment opportunities;

a training hotline between jobcentres and the TEC, a dedicated job shop and canvassing or employers;

a drive in respect of apprentices to secure the opportunity to finish their training programmes with a new employer, or exceptionally wholly within a TEC supported training centre;

immediate access to training courses, with particular emphasis on adapting and developing existing skills to suit alternative employment opportunities;

a partnership with North Tyneside city challenge to provide extra support for any "high cost" skills training for North Tyneside city challenge area residents;

the offer of training vouchers to each individual to help them secure jobs with new employers. Employers can then use the vouchers to implement customised training for these new recruits; business skills training for those preparing for entry into self-employment.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the measures taken by his Department in the northern region in response to redundancies and closures in the shipbuilding, ship repair, offshore technology, heavy engineering, mining, utility and construction industries.

Miss Widdecombe: A range of measures has been introduced in response to redundancies and closures in north-east traditional industries. These have focused on helping those affected to find jobs and access training, further and higher education opportunities and, in appropriate cases, enter self-employment.

Tyneside training and enterprise council and the Employment Service have worked closely with local authorities, Tyne and Wear development corporation, further and higher education institutions and local employers in developing and implementing the measures.

The measures cover:

advice and guidance about employment opportunities, training opportunities and further and higher education opportunities; efforts by ES to build up job banks and find vacancies for redundant workers; provision of additional training opportunities: additional funds have been allocated to Swan Hunter and coal closures; further and higher education institutions have responded readily to requests for information from redundant workers.

Tyne and Wear development corporation and local city challenge companies have also been involved in the creation of new opportunities for redundant workers. In the wider context of the Government office for the north-east, the Employment Department works closely with the Department of the Environment and the Department of Trade and Industry in ensuring that the needs of redundant work people are taken into account.

In addition to the above specific measures, efforts have been made to ensure that people affected by redundancies have ready access to the existing range of TEC and ES services. In particular, arrangements have been made to ensure the speedy processing of claims for unemployment benefit and advice on benefit entitlements and the normal eligibility conditions for access to training for work have been waived for redundant employees.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what special initiatives he has undertaken to respond to high levels of male unemployment in Newcastle, East and Wallsend following the closure of Swan Hunter and further redundancies at NEI Parsons.

Miss Widdecombe: Following the receivership of Swan Hunter, Tyneside training and enterprise council and the local employment service have provided a range of additional job search assistance and training opportunities:

advice and guidance on retraining, further and higher education, self-employment and resettlement assistance leading to appropriate employment opportunities;

a training hotline between jobcentres and the TEC, a dedicated job shop and canvassing of employers;

a drive in respect of apprenticeships to secure the opportunity to finish their training programmes with a new employer, or exceptionally wholly within a TEC supported training centre;

immediate access to training courses, with particular emphasis on adapting and developing existing skills to suit alternative employment opportunities;

a partnership with North Tyneside city challenge to provide extra support for any "high cost" skills training for North Tyneside city challenge area residents;

the offer of training vouchers to each individual to help them secure jobs with new employers. Employers can then use these vouchers to implement customised training for these new recruits;

business skills training for those preparing for entry into self-employment.

Following the announcement of the redundancies at NEI Parsons, Tyneside TEC and the local ES have given those people affected immediate eligibility to their range of job search assistance and training opportunities.

Unemployment

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the Blyth Valley constituency, for each year since 1988, had been unemployed (a) for less than six months, (b) for six months to one year, (c) for one year to two years and (d) for over two years.

Mr. Oppenheim: Unadjusted claimant unemployment statistics by duration are available for the months of January, April, July and October and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people are currently seeking work but receive no unemployment benefit because of the length of their period of unemployment, and no social security payments because of the income of a spouse or partner in work.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 17 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of unemployed people who are currently seeking work, but have exhausted their entitlement to unemployment benefit (UB) and who do not receive social security payments because of the income of a spouse or partner in work.

Unfortunately this information is not fully available.

There are 641,000 people who are currently seeking work and have exhausted their entitlements to UB, but continue to sign at an Employment Service (ES) local office. While most clients registered with the ES would be entitled to and in receipt of some form of social security payment such as Housing benefit, family credit or National Insurance contributions credits, 97,099 of the above figure were not receiving any payment in respect of Income Support.

Social security data are not held on the reasons why a person does not receive an income related benefit so I am afraid I am unable to be more helpful.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of unemployment in each year since 1979.

Mr. Oppenheim: Unemployment statistics on both the claimant count basis and on the internationally recognised standard definition of the International Labour Organisation can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the current (a) unemployment rate and (b) number of persons unemployed among black people under 25 years of age in (i) London and (ii) Tottenham, in each case breaking the total rate down by gender;

(2) what is the current (a) unemployment rate and (b) number of persons unemployed among black people in (i) London and (ii) Tottenham, in each case breaking the total down by gender.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The following table gives the latest information available from the labour force survey:

ILO unemployed people in London from the black ethnic group summer 1994 (not seasonally adjusted)

	All persons	Men	Women
ILO unemployment rate (per cent.)	28	34	22
Numbers unemployed (000s)	72	46	26
Of which aged 16–24

Numbers unemployed (000s)	21	15	[1]

Training

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage of those leaving youth training schemes who progressed to (a) full-time work, (b) part-time work, (c) self-employment, (d) further education and training and (e) unemployment, in Southampton, Itchen, in Southampton and in Hampshire in each of the last five years.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Claimant unemployment statistics by duration are only available, only on the unadjusted basis and for the months of January, April, July and October.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what are the results of the youth training leavers survey for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, for the period December 1992 to January 1994, for all leavers and separately for male and female, for each ethnic group and for those with a disability or health problem, the number and proportion of trainees who six months after leaving were (a) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (b) in a full-time job with another employer, (c) employed in their own business, (d) in a part-time job, (e) in voluntary work, (f) on another Government training programme, (g) on a full-time education or training course, (h) unemployed and claiming benefit, (i) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (j) in a jobclub and (k) doing something else;

(2) what are the results from the training for work leavers survey for the period December 1992 to January 1994 for each training and enterprise council area in England and Wales and each local enterprise company area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of leavers who had (a) been entered for a vocational qualification, (b) obtained a vocational qualification, (c) had failed to obtain a vocational qualification and (d) were awaiting their results; and what is the number and proportion of training for work leavers who, six months after leaving, were (i) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (ii) in a full-time job with another employer, (iii) employed in their own business, (iv) in a part-time job, (v) in voluntary work, (vi) on another Government training programme, (vii) on a full-time education or training course, (viii) unemployed and claiming benefit, (ix) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (x) in a jobclub and (xi) doing something else, and the number and proportion of training for work leavers who had completed the training agreed in their initial action plan;

(3) what are the results of the youth training leavers survey for the period December 1992 to January 1994 for each training and enterprise area in England and Wales and each local enterprise council area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of youth training leavers who were (a) in full-time work with the same employer, (b) in full-time work with a different employer, (c) in part-time work, (d) on a full-time course at a college/training centre, (e) on another youth training scheme, (f) doing something else, (g) who were unemployed and (h) who had obtained a vocational qualification; and what were (i) the number of questionnaires issued, (ii) the usable percentage response rate and (iii) the percentage or respondents who were early leavers;

(4) what are the results of the training for work leavers survey for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, for the period between December 1992 and January 1994, for all leavers and separately for male and female, for each ethnic group, and for those with a disability or health problem, the number and proportion of training for work leavers who had (a) been entered for a vocational qualification, (b) obtained a vocational qualification, (c) had failed to obtain a vocational qualification and (d) were awaiting their results; and what was the number and proportion of training for work leavers who six months after leaving were (i) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (ii) in a full-time job with another employer, (iii) employed in their own business, (iv) in a part-time job, (v) in voluntary work, (iv) on another Government training programme, (vii) on a full-time education or training course, (viii) unemployed and claiming benefit, (ix) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (x) in a jobclub and (xi) doing something else, and the number and proportion of training for work leavers who had completed the training agreed in their initial action plan.

Mr. Paice [holding answer 8 December 1994]: I have recently written to the hon. Member and placed a copy of my reply in the Library.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1994, 23 individuals who were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit were appointed to the public bodies which are the responsibility of the Employment Department group.

Minimum Wage

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what independent evidence is available which examines the employment effects of the minimum wage.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 16 January 1995]: There is a large body of evidence which examines the effects of minimum wages on employment. This includes most recently the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's jobs study, the International Monetary Fund's world economic outlook, and the European Commission's White Paper on competitiveness.

Details of earlier studies and reports were given in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. McLoughlin), on 4 November 1992, Official Report, column 299.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Universities

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the number of students attending Scottish universities in the academic year 1994–95; and if he will give the figures for attendance at the same institutions in 1984–85 and 1989–90.

Mr. Lang: Information for 1994–95 is not yet available. Figures for universities alone would not be directly comparable because five higher education institutions in Scotland have been awarded university title since 1992.

For the other academic years requested and for 1993–94, the numbers of students undertaking higher education courses in higher education institutions in Scotland, by mode of study, are as follows:

Year	Full-time	Part-time	Total
1984–85	71,030	13,333	84,363
1989–90	81,496	17,043	98,539
1993–94	112,167	20,306	132,473

Sea Freight Subsidies

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the 1994 KPMG report on sea freight subsidies to the Scottish islands.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: After full and careful consideration, my right hon. Friend concluded that as the report was commissioned to inform consideration of policy options by Government and contains a considerable amount of commercial confidential information, it would not be appropriate to publish it.

Housing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homeless applications to local authorities in Scotland there were in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The most recent information on homelessness applications for 1992–93 is published in statistical bulletin HSG/1994/3. The 1978–79 figure was published in the "Scottish Housing Statistics" No. 6. Copies of both can be obtained from the House Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what were the levels of (a) new build starts and (b) new build completions by (i) Scottish local authorities, (ii) new towns and (iii) Scottish Special Housing Association-Scottish Homes in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what were the levels of new build starts and completions by housing associations and co-operatives in Scotland in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The most recent information is published in the Scottish Office statistical bulletin HSG/1994/9. The 1978 figures were published in "Scottish Housing Statistics". Copies of both can be obtained from the House Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the levels of Government financial support for housing associations and co-operatives in 1978 and in the latest year, expressed in 1994–95 prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The levels of Government financial support to housing associations and co-operatives in 1978–79 and 1993–4, expressed in 1994–95 prices, were £91.9 million and £268.3 million respectively.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of (a) local authorities, (b) new town and (c) Scottish Special Housing Association dwellings in Scotland in 1978, and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The most recent information is published in the Scottish Office statistical bulletin HSG/1994/9. The 1978–79 figures were published in the "Scottish Housing Statistics" No. 6. Copies of both can be obtained from the House Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the total capital spend by (a) Scottish local authorities, (b) new towns and (c) Scottish Special Housing Association-Scottish Homes was (i) new build and (ii) modernisation in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information for new towns and SSHA-Scottish Homes is contained in the tables. Figures for capital expenditure by local authorities on new build and modernisations in 1978–79 and 1993–94 are published annually in "Scottish Local Government Finance Statistics" which is available in the Library of the House.

Table 1: (New Towns)

[1] Own stock expenditure only.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the total capital spend and (b) the total revenue spend on local authority, new town and Scottish Special Housing Association housing in Scotland in 1978 and in the latest year, expressed in 1994–95 prices; and how much of the total revenue spend in each year was financed by direct central Government grant.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is set out in the following table. Comparable information on local authority revenue expenditure in 1978–79 was not readily available and I shall write to the hon. Member.

The reduction in revenue and capital expenditure between 1978–79 and 1993–94 largely reflects the substantial reduction in size of the public sector housing stock. The reduction in central Government grant is in line with the policy of moving away from indiscriminate general subsidies and targeting tenants in greatest need through the housing benefit system. The expenditure attributed to Scottish Homes is on its own stock and excludes support for housing associations.

	Local Authority		SSHA/Scottish homes		New Towns
	1978–79 £ million	1993–94 £ million	1978–79 £ million	1993–94 £ million	1978–79 £ million	1993–94 £ million

Capital Expenditure	683.3	580.4	94.6	51.7	99.2	35.3
Central Government Grants	451.2	36.6	79.9	Nil	105.1	21.7

All figures are expressed in 1994–95 prices.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the total number of residential property sales in Scotland for each of the complete years since 1982–83 indicating for each year how many were as a result of public sector tenants exercising their right to buy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Statistical information is not held centrally on residential property transactions in Scotland.

School Inspectors

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if all inspectors of schools have personal, practical experience of teaching in the sector and subjects they are inspecting.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Posts as Her Majesty's inspectors of schools are open to applicants who have distinguished service and occupied senior posts in education or who bring relevant experience gained elsewhere which can be applied within education. All Her Majesty's inspectors currently inspecting schools, colleges of further education and community education services have appropriate personal and practical experience relevant to the sectors and subjects they inspect. An extensive programme of staff development allows updating and extension of their expertise and experience across sectors.

Homelessness

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to outline the Government's proposals on homelessness following the responses to the consultation paper "Tackling Homelessness", and when he intends to resume the planned consultation exercise on amending the 1991 code of guidance on homelessness.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are still considering the nearly 160 responses received to "Tackling Homelessness", and we will announce our decisions in due course. A revised draft code of guidance on homelessness, taking account of these decisions, will be issued for comment later this year.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many emergency admissions were recorded for each health board for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1994, Official Report, column 336, what percentage of total admissions was represented by emergency hospital admissions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table below shows emergency admissions as a percentage of total in-patient admissions for Scotland for the calendar years 1989 to 1993.

Supermarket, Anstruther

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, columns 724–25, when he now expects to announce his decision in the public local inquiry into the provision of a supermarket in Anstruther.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend expects to announce his decision by the end of this month.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office maintains its own public appointments list and therefore makes limited use of names from the Public Appointments Unit. The Scottish Office public appointments list is used as a source of names of suitably qualified candidates for consideration for a wide range of appointments which I make. From time to time the Public Appointments Unit passes names to the Scottish Office for the public appointments list, and vice versa. No central records are kept of the source of names of those who are appointed to public bodies.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1994, Official Report, columns 336–37, if he will now publish information, for 1993–94 on general practitioner fundholders' savings.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested relates to GP fundholder savings which are retained by the health board on the fundholder's behalf to be used for the benefit of patients. These figures are available only for those years for which audited health board accounts have been completed. The audited accounts for 1993–94 have still not been finalised but it is estimated that savings will be about 4 per cent.

NHS Helpline

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the distinction between an interactive and non-interactive phone call made to the NHS helpline; how many calls were made to it in each month since 25 October 1994; and what were the costs of administering and operating the helpline since his parliamentary answer of 26 October 1994, Official Report, column 727.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Interactive calls are those which are answered by the NHS helpline and information is provided by the adviser about the NHS in Scotland. Non-interactive calls are those which are hoax calls; those which are from people who remain silent when put through to the adviser; or those who have dialled the wrong number.

Expenditure on administering and operating the NHS helpline between 25 October and 16 January totals £61,987.50. This includes additional resources totalling £16,000 in order to extend the hours of operation of the helpline and the number of telephone lines available to meet public demand for information during the measles-rubella immunisation campaign. The number of calls, both interactive and non-interactive, each month since 25 October 1994 is as follows:

Date	Number
26 October–18 November	5,066
19 November–16 December	2,431
17 December–12 January	1,080
Total	8,577

Ophthalmic Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which health boards in Scotland operate remote area schemes under the General Ophthalmic Services Regulations; when these services were introduced in these areas; what was the cost of providing this service in the health board areas in each financial year for each health board; which areas are covered by the remote area schemes; what are the numbers of opticians employed by each health board to provide this remote area service; and how many patients are seen as part of these schemes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Provisions permitting the operation of remote area schemes within general ophthalmic services were introduced in 1975. Health boards can apply to the Secretary of State to operate a scheme in any area where this is required to meet the needs of residents. Under such schemes opticians may be reimbursed for their expenses incurred in travelling to remote locations to provide general ophthalmic services. Information about current schemes for the last three financial years is in the table.

Housing Associations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money each development corporation in Scotland has spent on the establishment of housing associations within their areas; and if he will list these associations and the amounts of money received.

Mr. Stewart: Expenditure up to 31 December 1994 is set out in the following table.

Development Corporation	Housing Association	Amount £
Cumbernauld	Abronhill Housing Association	10,500
East Kilbride	East Kilbride and District Housing Association	64,923
Glenrothes	Glenrothes Community Housing Association	25,782
Irvine	Irvine Housing Association	[1]301,000
Livingston	Almond Housing Association	62,782

[1] Irvine Development Corporation has seconded two staff to Irvine Housing Association and their costs are included. Scottish Homes is expected to make a contribution towards the costs of setting up the association after the deduction of the costs of the secondments.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many properties in each development corporation in Scotland have been transferred to housing associations as a result of (a) trickle transfer and (b) lease of new build properties since the inception of this policy.

Mr. Stewart: As at 31 December 1994, Livingston development corporation had transferred 63 vacant properties to housing associations under trickle transfer. No other corporations have transferred properties under trickle transfer and no corporations have transferred properties following the lease of new build.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedure exists for the long-term transfer of housing to the housing associations within each of the development corporation areas which currently lease these properties.

Mr. Stewart: The only leasing arrangement is between Irvine housing association and Irvine development corporation. The association has made an offer to purchase 160 of the 183 homes it presently has on lease. This offer is being considered by the corporation.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial agreement has been reached between Irvine development corporation and the Irvine housing association as regards the properties leased to it by the Irvine development corporation.

Mr. Stewart: The terms of the agreement require Irvine housing association to collect the rents for Irvine development corporation.

The association recovers separately from the corporation the costs it incurs in managing and maintaining the homes.

Royal Visits

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing each royal visit to Scotland since 1984, giving details of the (a) date, (b) location, (c) purpose and (d) participating Scottish Office Minister or Ministers.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Where possible, I or one of my ministerial colleagues accompanies, Her Majesty the Queen as Minister in attendance when she is carrying out public engagements in Scotland. Members of the royal family are conscious of the demands on Ministers and it has been the practice for many years that Ministers are not, as a matter of course, in attendance on all visits. Ministers do not normally accompany other members of the royal family on visits to Scotland.

The Scottish Office information directorate acts on behalf of the press secretary to Her Majesty the Queen in making media arrangements for visits to Scotland by Her Majesty the Queen and immediate members of the royal family and, in this capacity, is present on such visits.

While the date and location of visits by Her Majesty the Queen and immediate members of the royal family are available, no central records are held as to the purpose of a visit or whether or not a Minister was present. The available details are being extracted and will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which Scottish Office (a) Ministers and (b) civil servants accompanied His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales on his visit to Strathclyde flood sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Representatives of the Scottish Office information directorate assisted with the media arrangements during the visit by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to the flood sites.

The answer to a question about ministerial attendance at royal visits, which I gave to the hon. Member today, explains the practice followed for many years. On this occasion, no Minister was present.

Flooding, Strathclyde

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on how the Bellwin formula will apply to (a) Renfrew district council and (b) Strathclyde regional council in relation to the floods in December 1994; what will be the trigger levels; what is his latest estimate of the total relevant costs in relation to the formula and the amount likely to be payable to each authority by his Department; what these amounts will cover; and what these amounts will exclude;

(2) in what ways the Bellwin scheme might be utilised to (a) defray the costs of repairing and/or reinstating housing stock owned by local authorities, (b) defray the costs of repairing and/or reinstating housing stock owned by housing associations, (c) defray costs of repairing and/or reinstating houses owned by individual owner-occupiers and (d) pay the costs of replacing houses which are deemed to be technically or economically unviable.

(3) what is his latest estimate of the direct costs of the flooding in December 1994 to (a) the Scottish Office, (b) Strathclyde regional council, (c) Renfrew district council, (d) affected tenants and (e) affected owner-occupiers; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will detail the expenditure his Department has committed to dealing with the problems created by the floods of December 1994, excluding additional borrowing consent for local authorities and moneys payable through the application of the Bellwin formula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Under the Bellwin scheme, each authority will receive grant at 85 per cent. of all eligible expenditure above its threshold. The threshold for Renfrew district council is £46,490 and for Strathclyde regional council £3,591,706. I do not yet have sufficient information from the authorities to estimate what may eventually be payable. However, all eligible expenditure above the thresholds will qualify for support. My officials are in contact with those authorities, but I do not want to press them for estimates before they are ready and while their priority must be to deal with the remaining effects of the flooding. The scheme on this occasion gives authorities until 31 May this year to prepare and submit their claims.

In order to be eligible for grant, expenditure must be incurred by a local authority in providing relief and carrying out immediate works to safeguard life or property or prevent suffering or severe inconvenience to affected communities. Expenditure by local authorities on repairing their own housing stock could be eligible for grant in as much as it met these criteria, but expenditure on reinstating stock would seem less likely to be so. The cost of longer-term repair and restoration of local authority housing stock, and the cost of constructing new houses to replace any houses made permanently unusable, would be of a capital nature and therefore not eligible for grant under the Bellwin scheme. Under the scheme, grant is payable only to local authorities, and therefore costs incurred by housing associations and individual owner-occupiers would not be eligible for grant.

The direct costs of the flooding to the Scottish Office will be those arising from Government support under the Bellwin scheme for the expenditure incurred by local authorities. Strathclyde regional council has given me a preliminary estimate of £10 million for the costs of emergency action, including around £4 million for damage to the rail network. The regional council's capital costs falling in 1994–95 are estimated to be £1.365 million, for which I have already issued a supplementary allocation. I have said that I am prepared to consider further requests from the council for capital allocations arising from the flooding and if necessary will take these into account in setting the council's allocation in 1995–96. The Scottish Office is presently awaiting Renfrew district council's assessment of the extent of the damage to the housing stock, both public and private sector, and to other council property, and the costs likely to be involved in repair works.

Excluding the additional housing and non-housing capital allocations which have to date been made available to the local authorities affected, of some £100,000 and £1,365,000 respectively, and the Government's open-ended commitment to 85 per cent. grants under the Bellwin scheme, the other expenditure so far committed by the Scottish Office is £10,000 which is to be paid to the Clyde River Purification Board to help meet the costs of a hydrological study into the flooding. The Scottish Office is prepared to support other joint studies into the flooding. Should Strathclyde regional council, as the flood prevention authority, decide in the light of that study, or following its general consideration of the issues arising from the flooding, to carry out flood prevention schemes, grant of 50 per cent. will be payable on the cost of any such schemes which may be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of State.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was (a) the date and (b) the purpose of each visit by a Scottish Office Minister to the areas in Strathclyde which suffered flooding in December 1994; what were the main issues arising from each of these visits; what specific action followed each visit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on his visit to (a) the Park avenue and (b) the Collier street area of Johnstone following the recent flooding;

(3) if he will make a statement on his visit, and those of his ministerial colleagues, the hon. Members for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) and for Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton), to the Stockholm crescent and Barterholm-Thrushcraigs areas of Paisley following the recent floodings.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 January 1995]: I visited areas affected by flooding on 12 December and my right hon. Friend made visits to affected areas in Irvine on 24 December, Kirkintilloch on 26 December and Paisley on 27 December, accompanied by the local Members of Parliament.

The purpose of these visits was to convey our sympathy, and that of the Government, to those who had suffered loss and disruption of their lives, to express our thanks to the members of the emergency services and others, and to assess how the Government could help. As a result, we instructed our officials to ensure that all possible sources of assistance were made available to the councils involved and to explore various related matters.

My hon. Friend the Minister with responsibilities for education and housing later visited Renfrew district council on 6 January to see for himself the areas of local authority housing which had been most affected by the recent flooding in advance of making decisions concerning local authority housing capital allocations for 1995–96 in the next few weeks. He had a useful discussion with the council and we await its further assessment of the repair costs and implications for its housing programme. My hon. Friend confirmed that the Government would look sympathetically at the council's case for additional housing capital resources in 1995–96 to tackle flood damage.

Strathclyde regional council will also wish to review its flood prevention policy. Developers and planners will also wish to give careful consideration to flood risks for new developments. Scottish Office Environment Department officials are currently working on, as a matter of priority, a new national planning policy guideline on planning and flooding for publication by the spring.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing, in descending order of severity, the worst floods recorded in Scotland in terms of (a) average depth, (b) greatest depth and (c) the number of houses affected since 1965.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 January 1995]: This information is not held centrally. However, the January 1993 Tay floods and the recent floods in west central Scotland were more extreme than any previous floods in the period of record. The return period of both of these flood events is estimated at more than 100 years on the major rivers, and possibly 200 years on the Clyde.

In the 1993 Tay floods, about 1,500 houses were inundated, over 1,100 in North Muirton, while in December 1994, 450 houses were inundated in Strathclyde. The total number of houses suffering damage was much greater in both events, some 3,500 in the recent flooding.

Previous major flooding events affected mainly agricultural land with few houses being flooded. Nevertheless, there have been many cases of localised flooding of housing in areas such as Langside on the White Cart water and adjoining the Brock burn.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the total number of households in each relevant parliamentary constituency which were affected by flood damage in December 1994; which of these (a) remained partially habitable, (b) were uninhabitable for two days or less, (c) were uninhabitable for more than two days but less than two weeks and (d) were uninhabitable for more than two weeks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The table sets out the information in the form requested, and is based on provisional information provided by the local authorities concerned. In some cases, particularly Glasgow, the figures include houses which remained habitable but required some repairs attributable to flood damage. Where the information was not available on a parliamentary constituency basis, the relevant district council area has been used.

Households affected by floods damage—December 1994

[1] Breakdown in categories (a)–(d) is available for local authority stock only.

1. In Glasgow and Falkirk districts some houses required repair but remained habitable throughout. The figure for Glasgow was 2,800. Most of these were not affected by flooding, and 32 were uninhabitable for between 2 days and 2 weeks and 23 for over 2 weeks. The figure for Falkirk was 17. None of these houses was uninhabitable.

NHS Redundancy Payments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been the costs of redundancy payments to NHS staff in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally in Scotland.

Natural Disasters (Scotland) Bill

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet the hon. Member for Paisley, South to discuss the provisions of the Natural Disasters (Scotland) Bill to (a) avert natural disasters including floods and (b) assist victims of such disasters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 January 1995]: I will be happy to meet the hon. Member, and I have asked for this to be arranged as soon as possible.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 19 December, Official Report, column 951, what information is collected from health boards by his Office regarding hospital closures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The Scottish Office receives information from health boards on which hospitals have closed. My reply of 19 December on this subject refers to that subject.

Independent Schools

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the operation of the assisted places scheme in ensuring the continued operation of the independent schools sector.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The aims of the assisted places scheme are to enable children to attend independent schools which would otherwise be beyond their parents' financial circumstances and to widen parental choice. The scheme is not intended as a means of providing financial assistance to the independent schools sector. Currently, some 3,000 children receive assistance under the scheme. An independent survey report, published in 1992, provided clear evidence that it was meeting its objectives.

Manual Handling Operations

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) improvement notices, (b) prohibition notices and (c) prosecutions have been issued by the Health and Safety Executive to NHS trusts in Scotland in relation to breaches of the Manual Handling Operations Regulations 1992 since 1 January 1993.

Mr. Oppenheim: I have been asked to reply.

No enforcement notices were issued or prosecutions initiated by the Health and Safety Executive against health services in Scotland in relation to breaches of the Manual Handling Operations Regulations 1992 during the period 1 January 1993 to 31 March 1994. Figures for the current financial year are not yet available.

Small Pharmacies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received during the past three months concerning the need to maintain the professional allowance for small pharmacies dispensing between 1,000 and 1,500 prescriptions per month; and if she proposes to modify her intended policy in the light of such representations.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 983, since when there have been a further seven representations about the graduated transitional payment. We expect to discuss the matter with pharmacists' representatives in the forthcoming pay round.

Midwives

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the ratio of patients to midwives in (a) the Northumberland health authority and (b) the Wansbeck and Cheviot maternity unit.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the vice chairman of Northumberland health authority, Mr. David Wright, and the chairman of the Cheviot and Wansbeck national health service trust, Mr. Roger Baker, for details.

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action her Department is taking to monitor local authority spending in the independent sector in their provision of community care services.

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities are required to spend 85 per cent. of the Department of Social Security transfer element of their special transitional grant in the independent sector. Annual returns of this expenditure have to be agreed by the district auditor before being submitted to the Department of Health.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 10 January 1995, Official Report, column 126–27, what plans she has to put out to tender in the private sector the work now being carried out by the Health Education Authority.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 10 January, Official Report, column 126–27.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places in secure accommodation are currently available for persons aged under 16 years in Northumberland; at what location; and what were the figures for the previous five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: There are five places in secure accommodation approved for use by young people in Northumberland, located at Netherton Park children's home, Morpeth. This figure has not changed in the period requested, but there are plans to provide an additional seven places by mid-1996. The places are not restricted to those aged under 16.

Cot Mattresses

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has in respect of the effect of biodegradation of compounds of antimony used in flameproofing cot mattresses; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The hypothesis that toxic gases are released from the biodegradation of the flameproofing compounds in cot mattresses and covers was thoroughly investigated in 1990 by an expert working group chaired by Professor Paul Turner. The group found no evidence that there was a link between sudden infant death syndrome incidence, the presence of antimony and associated low levels of arsenic impurity, or phosphorus additives in cot mattresses and their covers, microbial contamination of those mattresses and covers and the generation of toxic volatile gases.

Dr. Kenneth Calman, the chief medical officer, has recently set up an expert group to steer further work by the Department of Health on cot deaths. This group is chaired by Lady Limerick.

The group's terms of reference are:

> To review the findings of the report on "Sudden Infant Death Syndromes (The "Turner Report", 1991) and any subsequent data on hypotheses linking antimony with unexplained deaths in infants; and to advise the CMO on what further studies should be undertaken to investigate postulated causal relationships between chemicals and cot deaths.

The group has been asked to review the available material and to provide the Department with advice as quickly as possible.

Guillain Barré Syndrome

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many cases known to her Department children vaccinated against measles and rubella in the last five years have developed symptoms of Guillain Barré syndrome; what research has been done by her Department or elsewhere into the causes of the syndrome; what action she will be taking or is considering; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Guillain Barré syndrome is a rare neurological condition that usually presents as acute flaccid paralysis. The condition is thought to have a post-infectious aetiology. In its detailed review of adverse effects of vaccines, the United States Institute of Medicine could find no evidence to support or reject a causal association between Guillain Barré syndrome and measles or rubella immunisation.

Three cases of Guillain Barré syndrome after measles, mumps and rubella vaccine have been reported to the committee on the safety of medicines since 1988. The reporting of a temporal association with immunisation does not necessarily imply causality. One case of Guillain Barré syndrome has been reported in association with the measles and rubella immunisation campaign. Further investigations are being undertaken into this case.

At the instigation of the Department of Health, the communicable disease surveillance centre of the public health laboratory service set up nationwide surveillance of acute flaccid paralysis—for which Guillain Barré syndrome is the commonest cause—between July 1991 and June 1994. The study is being analysed, but preliminary evaluation suggests that the number of cases reported in association with the measles and rubella campaign are similar to those that could be expected in the absence of the campaign.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff in her Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Sackville: Information about more junior staff is not held centrally. Since February 1993, there have been two reports of job offers from staff in grade 3 and above. So far, one of these has been followed by an application under the business appointments procedure.

Ambulance Service

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times an ambulance has not arrived within the national charter standard time by ambulance service in each year since April 1991.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The national patients charter standard provides that ambulances responding to an emergency call should arrive at the scene of an incident in 95 per cent. of cases, within 14 minutes for urban services and within 19 minutes for rural services.

Information was not collected in sufficient detail in 1991–92 to provide the figures requested. Figures for 1992–93 and 1993–94 are shown in the table.

Budgets

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total budget of (a) fundholders and (b) district health authorities in 1991–92, 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 13 January 1995]: Details of budgets allocated to general practitioner fundholders and district health authorities are shown in the table. General practitioner fundholder data include allocations for drugs and staff in addition to the hospital and community health services that they can purchase.

1. Allocations to district health authorities and general practitioner fundholders are made by regional health authorities who have provided the information in the table.
2. Final district health authority cash limits for the years 1991–92, 1992–93, and 1993–94 include initial cash limits and adjustments in-year, and exclude general practitioner fundholder allocations. For 1994–95 the figures recorded are initial cash limits and exclude in-year adjustments. Some regions have included general practitioner fundholder budgets in these initial cash limits.

Cot Deaths

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the budget for health promotional activities on cot death in each of the last five years; and what is the projected budget for the next two years.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The table shows the amounts that the Department has spent on publicity aimed specifically at reducing the risk of cot death since the introduction of the "Back to Sleep" campaign in December 1991 and Health Education Authority initiatives aimed at reducing smoking prevalence in district groups.

' Provisional figures for the year to date. Further expenditure is planned to the end of the current financial year.

The Department of Health budgets for 1995–96 and 1996–97 and most of those for the HEA have yet to be agreed.

Departmental expenditure in 1991 went towards a press and television cot death campaign, as well as the production and distribution of a departmental leaflet, "Reducing the Risk of Cot Death", which has since been reprinted and almost 5 million copies distributed so far.

The recently announced national anti-smoking campaign managed by the HEA over the next three financial years will be primarily aimed at adults, and especially parents of young children. This is particularly relevant to cot death because smoking is a major risk factor associated with it. The HEA's two major publications in this field, the "Pregnancy Book", given free to first-time mothers and "Birth to Five", given free to first-time parents, both contain advice on reducing the risk of cot death.

Much health promotion work of this type is carried out by local health care units and health authorities. It is not possible to quantify this either in terms of time or cost. Health promotion activity aimed at pregnant women and new mothers is carried out in face-to-face contacts by individual midwives, health visitors, general practitioners, obstetricians and paediatricians during the course of routine care.

With the efforts of all those health professionals and the success of those initiatives, there has been a remarkable reduction in the number of cot deaths. In England and Wales over the period 1988–1993, we are pleased to say that the numbers have fallen by more than 70 per cent.

TRANSPORT

Passenger Timetable

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding inaccuracies in the Great Britain passenger timetable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: We have received a small number of representations about inaccuracies in the Great Britain passenger timetable. The timetable is published by BR, which is responsible for its accuracy.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Norris: The rules on outside appointments do not require Departments to maintain records of job offers to their staff.

Roads Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of United Kingdom roads expenditure, broken down to show the split between central and local government, for each of the following time periods expressed in 1993 prices (a) 1969 to 1974, (b) 1974 to 1979, (c) 1979 to 1984, (d) 1984 to 1989, (e) 1989 to 1994 and (f) 1994 to 1999 planned; and if he will provide the equivalent figures showing central and local government expenditures on the United Kingdom rail system.

Dr. Mawhinney: Comparable figures for the split between national and local roads expenditure relate to England only and are not available before 1989. Figures for each of the years 1989–90 to 1993–94 and estimated outturns for 1994–95 are given in 1993–94 prices. Central Government rail figures represent the external finance limit for BR-Railtrack; local government rail figures represent support for services in the metropolitan areas.

Vehicle Checks

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list vehicle spot checks planned and carried out in each of the last 12 months, stating in each case how many vehicles were tested, how many failed to meet roadworthiness standards, and how many planned checks were cancelled due to lack of police resources.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Vehicle Inspectorate agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Ms Joan Walley, dated 18 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning vehicle spot checks planned and carried out in each of the last 12 months, stating in each case how many vehicles were tested, how many failed to meet roadworthiness standards, and how many planned checks were cancelled due to lack of police resources.

The attached table shows the number of vehicle spot checks planned and carried out in each of the last 12 months, and the number failing to meet roadworthiness standards, to the extent that prohibition action was necessary.

The number of planned checks cancelled due to lack of police support is not available. The information we do have is set out below and covers the period from 1 April 1994 to the end of September 1994. It shows the number of unproductive hours (attendance hours) resulting from the withdrawal of police support from organised checks in progress.

Notes:

1. The number of planned inspections has been calculated from using the planned inspections for the year.
2. In relation to roadworthiness enforcement inspections "failed" has been interpreted as being the number of occasions when it was found necessary to issue a roadworthiness prohibition notice.
3. The inspections include all roadworthiness enforcement spot checks and exclude any conducted in connection with:
   a) accident or mechanical defect investigations and
   b) roadworthiness inspections done for operator licensing purposes.

Public Transport

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to redirect reductions in the roads budget into expenditure on public transport.

Dr. Mawhinney: The broad apportionment of my Department's budget was announced on 29 November. Details will be published in due course in the transport report 1995.

Mr. R. Howard

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to reply formally to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration's draft report on the care of Mr. R. Howard of Bexley.

Mr. Watts: The Department of Transport made its detailed response to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration last November, since when there has been further correspondence on factual and textual matters.

Highway Code

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates his Department have made of the percentage of total motorists owning a current copy of the highway code.

Mr. Norris: On the basis of sales figures provided by HMSO, about 20 per cent. of motorists, some 6.8 million, have bought a copy of the current edition of the highway code.

Motorists (Training)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department will announce plans for a scheme to offer further training for motorists who have already passed their test.

Mr. Norris: Soon.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's response to the proposal advanced by the Automobile Association for a graduated points threshold for new drivers.

Mr. Norris: We have considered carefully a number of proposals for improving the safety of new drivers, including those put forward by the Automobile Association. I am pleased to say that my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) has introduced the Road Traffic (New Drivers) Bill, which provides for the retesting of newly qualified drivers who commit certain traffic offences.

Rolling Stock (Safety)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response British Rail made to recommendation 55 of the Hidden report on the Clapham junction railway accident in respect of mark 1 rolling stock including class 411, 413, 415 and 416 vehicles in use on Network South East's south-eastern division routes in Kent.

Mr. Watts: British Rail carried out its stated programme of research into the structural integrity of its rolling stock, which included an assessment of the structural changes necessary to strengthen mark 1 vehicles with an expected life span of eight years or more. BR completed the programme by April 1991 and then discussed the results with the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate. BR concluded that very few of the mark 1 vehicles in classes 411, 413, 415 and 416 were projected to remain in service for eight years or more, and that it would not be reasonably practicable to carry out structural changes to these vehicles or to the remainder of mark 1 vehicles. I understand that Her Majesty's railway inspectorate agreed with BR's conclusions.

Motorists (Sight)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates his Department have made of the percentage of total motorists with inadequate eyesight due to (a) an absence of glasses or contact lenses and (b) inappropriate glasses or contact lenses.

Mr. Norris: None.

Safety Schemes, Derbyshire

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the allocations that have been made to Derbyshire county council under supplementary credit approval for local safety schemes over the last six years.

Mr. Norris: The allocations are:

Year	£
1991–92	300,000
1992–93	250,000
1993–94	330,000
1994–95	602,000
1995–96	642,000

Supplementary credit approvals were allocated for 1994–95 and 1995–96. Before then, support was given as transport supplementary grant, 50 per cent., and annual capital guideline, 50 per cent. Specific allocations for local safety schemes were not given before 1991–92.

Train Drivers' Radio Phones

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of ensuring that drivers' radio phones are effective at all points on the rail network through the installation of extra line side transmitter relay facilities;

(2) what agreement he has reached with British Rail and its subsidiary companies to ensure that drivers' radio phones can be used effectively on all parts of the rail network;

(3) what estimate he has made of the proportion of the rail network on which drivers' radio phones are ineffective because of reception blackspots;

(4) if he will publish a map indicating those sections of the rail network on which drivers' radio phones are ineffective because of reception blackspots.

Mr. Watts: These are operational matters for British Rail and Railtrack. I understand that British Rail has fitted the major part of the network with a system known as the national radio network. The target coverage for the NRN is 98 per cent. The remaining 2 per cent. of the network consists of problem spots, mainly in cuttings or tunnels, where complete coverage is not reasonably practicable unless the cab secure radio system for communicating with train drivers is provided. There is no map of these problem spots. The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate continues to monitor implementation of the cab radio programme by British Rail and Railtrack.

Cost Benefit Analyses

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he uses to assess whether value for money is obtained from his Department's road programme.

Mr. Watts: The Department employs cost-benefit analyses to appraise new road schemes at different stages of their preparation to ensure that they will provide value for money. The benefits measure is accident reductions and time and vehicle operating costs savings to road users. The analysis is complemented by wide-ranging appraisals of environmental impacts.

When schemes are completed, the accuracy of the predicted traffic flows—the key input for both the cost-benefit analyses and the environmental appraisal—is monitored. In response to a recommendation of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment, research is being undertaken to enhance and extend "before and after" scheme monitoring.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what adjustments he intends to propose in respect of the fixed trip matrix assumption in COBA.

Mr.Watts: In response to the recent report of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment, the Department has issued guidance on the use of currently available techniques for variable trip matrix appraisal. These appraisals will be undertaken for all national road schemes in preparation, except where prior assessment shows that the trip matrix will not vary significantly as a result of the scheme.

The Department has commissioned consultants to develop improved techniques for undertaking variable matrix economic appraisal, to complement the fixed matrix COBA program.

Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the eighth annual report of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee.

Mr Norris: The report has been received by my right hon. Friend and copies have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Jury Service (Blind People)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many blind people were turned down for jury service in the last year for which figures are available and in each of the previous four years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department does not collect data about the number of blind people who were either discharged or excused from jury service. Such information for the last five years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and its accuracy could not be guaranteed.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since February 1993, one offer of employment has been reported and was followed by an application to join the company.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Information about offers of employment from outside companies is not held centrally. Since February 1993, four applications to join an outside employer have been received.

Internet

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to introduce measures to combat the spread of pornography on computer via the Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: CCTA, the Government centre for information systems, has established a collaborative open group to examine and discuss all the ethical issues relating to the use of the Internet, and to report to me with recommendations.

All views and suggestions on such matters are most welcome, and should be sent either via Internet electronic mail to "ethics & ccta.gov.uk" or by post to:

Information Super-highway

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much public investment has been spent on research into the information super-highway by the Government for each of the financial years 1990–91, 1991–92, 1992–93, and 1993–94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Most of the public investment in research into leading-edge communications networks, or information super-highways, has focused on the joint academic network known as SuperJANET. The Higher Education Funding Council contributed £5.35 million and £8.06 million in the respective financial years 1992–93 and 1993–94 to the development of this multimedia broadband network for universities and other research institutions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Great Clock

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 327, when the modernised lighting behind the clock faces of the Great Clock will become fully operational; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: The new lighting will become fully operational at dusk on 19 January 1995 and it will save some £1,000 in electricity and £2,500 in maintenance costs each year. Thus, the installation cost of £20,000 will be recovered from savings in six years. The new fittings that have been installed are a special type of fluorescent bulb, which works on a high frequency induction principle. They have a lamp life of 60,000 hours which is about 13 years of normal use, and the output from each 55 watt bulb is equivalent to a 250 watt conventional incandescent lamp.

Banqueting Rooms Events (Sponsors)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee for what reasons the names of hon. Members sponsoring events in the Banqueting Room A, B, C and D are no longer listed on the notice board in the Terrace Corridor.

Mr. Colin Shepherd [holding answer 17 January 1995]: A new notice board was installed in the corridor outside the Terrace Dining Rooms during the Christmas recess. The lettering for this board has now been received, and I am pleased to advise the hon. Member that, for the convenience of those attending, the names of hon. Members hosting functions in Banqueting Rooms A, B, C and D are once again listed on the notice board in the terrace corridor.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister how many staff in his Office have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of those reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

The Prime Minister: Since February 1993, there have not been any applications for staff in my Office to join outside employers.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's view of the report by Lord Finsberg on Cyprus to be discussed at the Council of Europe meeting in Strasbourg on 2 February.

The Prime Minister: Lord Finsberg's report on the situation in Cyprus has been prepared in his capacity as rapporteur of the political committee of the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe. As such, it would not be proper for Her Majesty's Government to comment on the judgments made in the report. We share Lord Finsberg's desire to see continuing efforts to resolve the Cyprus dispute on the basis of UN resolutions, most recently UN Security Council resolution 939 of 29 July 1994.

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he made to Ministers or officials of the then Irish Government over delays in the extradition from the Irish Republic of Brendan Smyth.

The Prime Minister: None.

Modbury Team Ministry

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister what are the reasons for the delay in Privy Council approval for the Modbury team ministry within the Exeter diocese; and when a decision will be reached.

Mr. Alison: I have been asked to reply.

The matter is not yet with the Privy Council. The position is that the Church Commissioners have recently considered three representations against a draft Pastoral Scheme providing, inter alia, for the creation of the Modbury team ministry. The Commissioners' conclusions have now been shared with the Diocesan Bishop and their decision is expected to be announced shortly.

TREASURY

Inflation Forecasts

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of Her Majesty's Treasury panel of independent forecasters were, in their latest estimates, forecasting an inflation rates of less than 2.5 per cent. in 1996.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The inflation requested can be found in table B7 of the panel's latest report. A copy of the report is available in the House of Commons Library.

Taxation

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest estimates of the personal allowance as a percentage of average manual earnings in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95 and (d) 1995–96 for taxpayers who were (i) a single person, (ii) a married man with no children, (iii) a married man with two children and (iv) a married man with four children.

Sir George Young: Using the illustrative assumptions for the growth in earnings and prices given in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1995–96, real take-home pay for a married man on average earnings for all occupations will rise by £3.50 a week between 1992–93 and 1995–96 and for a single man by £7.50 a week.

Estimates of the income tax threshold as a percentage of average male manual earnings based on illustrative assumptions for earnings growth in 1994–95 and 1995–96 are in the table. A married person's tax threshold is unaffected by the number of children.

Since the introduction of the lower rate band in 1992–93 taxpayers with income just above the threshold pay tax at a rate of only 20 per cent.

	Tax threshold		Tax threshold as a percentage of average male manual earnings
	Single person £	Married man[1] £	Single person	Married man[1]
1992–93	3445	5165	24.4	36.5
1993–94	3445	5165	23.8	35.7
1994–95	3445	5165	[2]23.0	[2]34.5
1995–96	3525	4815	[2]22.5	[2]30.7

[1] Assumes that the married man receives a full married couple's allowance.

[2] Provisional. Assumes average male manual earnings increase by 3.5 per cent. in 1994–95 and 4.5 per cent. in 1995–96 in line with the assumptions for growth in average earnings given in the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96.

Electronic Mail

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to be able to receive and respond to communications via electronic mail.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury already sends out information electronically. Its Internet service was launched on 15 November 1994.

Material is provided on the Teasury's own Internet server on the world wide web. In addition to the world wide web, the same information can be obtained by electronic mail or by file transfer.

Users can also obtain help about the service using electronic mail. My Department has replied to all queries it has received to date.

As the service expands the Treasury hopes to be able to respond to more communications.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the lowest rate of exchange between the pound sterling and the deutschmark in February 1993; and what has been the change in the rate of the pound sterling against (a) the deutschmark (b) the ecu and (c) the dollar since then;

(2) what part, a desire to protect the value of the pound sterling fully against other EEC currencies played in the uneven interest rates this year;

(3) if (a) pound sterling and (b) the dollar are overvalued; and how over valuation is to be measured;

(4) what was the percentage reduction in the value of the pound sterling against the ecu and against non-ecu currencies included in the Bank of England index since August 1992;

(5) what conclusion he has drawn from Britain's membership of the ERM of the EMS.

(6) if he will publish an assessment of the effects of Britain's membership of the ERM on (a) jobs, (b) growth, (c) manufacturing and (d) the balance of payments.

Mr. Nelson: Movements in the exchange rate are considered as part of the general assessment of monetary conditions in setting monetary policy. The Government recognise the value of a stable exchange rate, but we do not set target rates. The valuation of any currency is determined by transactions in the foreign exchange markets.

The United Kingdom's membership of the ERM demonstrated that, for currency mechanisms to achieve greater exchange rate stability, broader economic convergence between member states is required.

Levels of employment, growth, manufacturing output and the balance of payments are affected by a wide range of factors; it is not possible to isolate the effects of any single factor.

Sterling's exchange rates against ecu and non-ecu currencies are published in table 7.1A of the Central Statistical Office's "Financial Statistics".

EU Price Index

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the EU harmonised price index is due to be introduced; how it will be constructed; and what plans there are to use it to update or replace the current retail prices index.

Mr. Nelson: The Statistical Office of the European Communities—Eurostat—has drawn up a Council regulation that prescribes that harmonised consumer price indices be developed from spring 1996. The methodology for constructing these indices is currently under discussion between groups of experts from EU member states and Eurostat. The harmonised consumer price index will be produced in addition to the retail prices index.

Central Statistical Office

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the budget of the Central Statistical Office was for each year from 1979; and what the projected budget is for the years 1994 to 1999 in current year prices.

Mr. Nelson: The table shows the net expenditure of the Central Statistical Office. The CSO's first full financial year as a separate Department with its own accounts was 1990–91, but also shown are figures from 1986–87, which have been published in the departmental report for information purposes. No figures are available prior to 1986–87. Figures from 1995–96 reflect planned expenditure. All figures are calculated in current year prices.

Income Tax

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of income tax revenue was paid by the lowest (a) 5 per cent., (b) 10 per cent., (c) 20 per cent. and (d) 30 per cent. of earners in each year from 1978–79 inclusive; and what are his future projections.

Sir George Young: The information requested is given in the table. The bottom 5 per cent. of income tax payers have accounted for less than one half of 1 per cent. of the total income tax liabilities for each year since 1978–79. Estimates for 1993–94 onwards are based on projections from the 1992–93 survey of personal incomes.

Retail Prices Index

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to update the basis upon which the retail prices index is calculated; and what amendments have been made to it since 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The Chancellor announced in answer to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on 10 January, Official Report, column 9, his acceptance of the recommendations made by the retail prices index advisory committee in its reports, Cm 2717 and Cm 2716, on owner-occupiers' housing costs and cars respectively. The changes will be implemented in the RPI from February 1995. The recommendations of the advisory committee in its previous reports, Cm 2142 in January 1993 and Cm 2153 in February 1993, on council tax and holidays were implemented in the RPI for 1993 and, for United Kingdom holidays, 1994. Minor changes to the items included in the RPI are made each year to take account of changes in consumer spending patterns. Details of the 1993 and 1994 changes are given in the April 1993 and March 1994 issues of the publication "Retail Prices Index", CSO business monitor MM23. All the above publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Civil Servant Travel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which airlines have been granted preferred carrier status for civil servant travel to overseas destinations.

Mr. Nelson: The preferred carrier for any civil servant's travel will depend on the circumstances of the journey concerned, including value for money. For regular requirements the Treasury has entered into arrangements with British Airways and British Midland.

VAT on Fuel

Ms Coffey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue has been raised from value added tax on gas and electricity standing charges since its introduction.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Standing charges on gas and electricity supply from 1 April to the end of December 1994 will give rise to £100 million of VAT.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimation he has made of the proportion in value added tax as a percentage of the total bill paid in (a) standing charge and (b) actual energy consumption by (i) low-income households and (ii) high-income households.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The answers will depend on the particular energy company and factors such as whether an economy rate is used, severity of weather, level of insulation and so on. The Government have made available a substantial package of help for those on low incomes.

Civil Aviation Authority (VAT)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the status of the Civil Aviation Authority for VAT purposes in respect of en route air navigation services now; what it will be after 1 April; who took the decision to change its status; what will be the implications of its changed status; what are the revenue implications; and who will benefit from them.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on 14 December 1994, Official Report, column 651.

Tax Office, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets Doncaster tax office (a) achieved and (b) failed to achieve during the last financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Both tax offices in Doncaster—Doncaster 1 and Doncaster 2—achieved all key assessment and customer service targets in the year to April 1994, as shown in table. With the exception of one target in each office, all key compliance targets were also met. Doncaster collection office also achieved all except one of its key operating targets in the year, as the table shows.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

The Attorney-General: Since 1 February 1993, one offer of employment has been reported by a member of staff in the Crown Prosecution Service. No such offers have been reported in the legal secretariat to the law officers, the Treasury Solicitor's department or the Serious Fraud Office.

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General how many times between April 1993 and February 1994 his advice was sought by (a) British Ministers, (b) British Government officials, (c) Irish Republic Ministers, (d) the Irish Attorney-General or (e) his officials about his view on the effect of lapse of time clause in the Extradition Act 1987 on the extradition of Brendan Smyth.

The Attorney-General: It is a well-established convention that the law officers do not normally disclose whether they have been asked to advise or the nature of their advice. The hon. Gentleman will however also note that the Extradition (Amendment) Act 1987 is not a United Kingdom statute but an Act of the Dail.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the use of death penalty for British citizens found guilty of drug trafficking abroad.

Mr. Baldry: The use of the death penalty for persons found guilty of drug trafficking abroad is a matter for those countries concerned, provided that respect is shown for the provisions on the death penalty of international human rights law. Once a British national has been sentenced to death, and all local appeals for clemency have been exhausted, we consider whether, and at what level, any further appeal should be made. Intervention is considered on a case-by-case basis.

Child Labour, India

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of India about the employment of children in Tirupur to make garments for supply to United Kingdom high street retailers.

Mr. Baldry: We have urged all United Nations member states to abide by the programme of action for the elimination of the exploitation of child labour, which was agreed in 1993 by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, of which India is a member.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had from Esmat Abdel Maguid on the issue of Libya's position in relation to the Lockerbie case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Dr. Meguid handed a copy of the Arab League's resolution concerning the Lockerbie bombing to Her Majesty's ambassador in Cairo on 31 March 1994. I discussed the Lockerbie issue with Dr. Meguid in November 1994.

East Timor

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to support the latest resolution of the European Parliament concerning the illegal occupation of East Timor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: There is no obligation on EU member states to implement the recommendations on this resolution. The measures it proposes would not, in our view, bring about a change in the circumstances of East Timor. We believe that the continuing dialogue between Indonesia and Portugal, under the auspices of the UN Secretary-General, offers the best prospect for securing agreement on a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement on the future of the territory.

United Kingdom Nationals (Expulsions)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom nationals have been expelled from other countries, and from which countries, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Goodlad: FCO staff have reported 27 offers of employment from outside employers since February 1993; 24 were followed up by an application.

Chechnya

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to a role for the Organisation for Co-operation and Security in Europe, formerly CSCE, in resolving the conflict in Chechnya.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe has an important role to play in the search for a settlement to the conflict in Chechnya, in particular in ensuring respect for human rights, the restoration of constitutional order and the preparation as soon as possible of elections.

The United Kingdom fully supports the efforts being undertaken by the OSCE chairman-in-office to maintain close contact with the Russian Government and welcomes Russia's willingness to involve the OSCE in the wider search for a long-term solution to the conflict.

Foreign Nationals (Expulsions)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many foreign nationals have been expelled from the United Kingdom in each year since 1979; and if he will list their nationalities.

Mr. Baldry: The number of foreign nationals—that is, diplomats officially accredited to missions in London—expelled from the United Kingdom since 1979 is as follows:

	Nationality	Number
1979	nil	—
1980	Libya	3

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues will be discussed at the UN Human Rights commission in Geneva on 30 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During its annual meeting—30 January to 10 March 1995—the UN Commission on Human Rights will as usual discuss a wide range of subjects. It is likely to pass over 100 resolutions on thematic issues and on human rights in individual countries. A copy of the annotated agenda will be placed in the Library of the House.

Copenhagen Summit

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will represent Her Majesty's Government at the United Nations summit for social development in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A final decision on attendance at the summit will be made nearer the date.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues Her Majesty's Government intend to raise as matters of priority at the United Nations summit for social development in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our principal priorities are to raise the level and improve the focus of the international debate around the issues of development.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sustainable Tourism

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received from the English regional tourist boards regarding the future of sustainable tourism projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I have received no such representations, but I hope that the regional tourists boards will continue to support and participate in sustainable tourism projects. Their past efforts, and those of their project partners, will form the basis of a guide to good visitor management practice, to be published later this year by my Department, in collaboration with the Countryside and Rural Development Commissions and the English tourist board. I believe that this guide will prove helpful to the tourism industry in further developing sustainable tourism in this country.

Mr. McWilliam: To aks the Secretary of State for National Heritage what resources have been directed to sustainable tourism initiatives drawn up by the English regional tourist boards in the last three years.

Mr. Dorrell: Since December 1991 the English tourist board has committed, out of grant in aid from my Department, a total of £257,500 to six local sustainable tourism initiatives in which the regional tourist boards have been involved.

Community Television Channels

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the number of holders of cable television licences which are currently providing community television channels; if he will identify those companies and the areas in which community channels are operating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Independent Television Commission has awarded 95 licensable programme services licences, of which 35 are operational and providing local programming. Local programming is produced in Telewest's south London and Avon franchises, Devanha group's Coventry and Aberdeen franchises, Telecential's Swindon franchise, the Cable Corporation's Windsor franchise, the Comcast-managed Birmingham franchise, LCL Cable Communications' Leicester franchise, IVS Cable Holdings in Andover and in Videotron's London holdings.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what requirements are imposed on holders of cable television licences to provide community television channels.

Mr. Dorrell: Under broadcasting legislation, there are no requirements on holders of cable television franchises to provide a community service channel.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action he is taking to ensure that the provision of local community television channels by holders of cable television licences do not become subject to the monopoly control or influence of existing news providers.

Mr. Dorrell: The cross-media ownership restrictions in the Broadcasting Act 1990 prevent local newspapers, local radio and regional Channel 3 companies from controlling cable franchises if there is a significant overlap in the areas served.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action he is taking to ensure that all holders of cable television licences fulfil their requirement to provide a community television channel.

Mr. Dorrell: Under broadcasting legislation, there are no requirements on holders of cable television franchises to provide a community service channel.

Cable Television

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what guidance has been issued on access to community television channels provided by cable television companies under the terms of their licence.

Mr. Dorrell: If community television channels are provided by cable television companies, it is for individuals to decide whether they wish to subscribe to them.

Cross-media Ownership

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans his Department has for encouraging a European Commission resolution on pluralism and cross-media ownership.

Mr. Dorrell: I will consider my response once the European Commission launches its consultation exercise and provides details of its proposals.

ENVIRONMENT

Edwardes Committee

18. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made following the Edwardes committee report on the development of national parks.

Sir Paul Beresford: Part III of the Environment Bill, which is being considered in another place, includes provisions which take forward our commitments to primary legislation for the national parks. These commitments are set out in our 1992 policy statement, "Fit for the Future", which we issued in response to the report of the Edwardes committee.

Local Government Review (Shropshire)

19. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recommendation of the local government review affecting Shropshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Local Government Commission published its final report on Shropshire last Wednesday. Following publication, there is a six-week period during which interested parties can make representations to us before we take any decisions on the commission's recommendations.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

23. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he foresees the development of compulsory competitive tendering on housing management.

Mr. Curry: We have put in place the legislative framework extending compulsory competitive tendering to housing management. The first contracts are due to be in operation from April 1996. I am pleased to say that local authorities are making good progress with their preparations.

Latham Report

24. Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about progress in implementing the Latham Report.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The review implementation forum, which is chaired by Sir Michael Latham, reported to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 19 December, with recommendations for taking forward the proposals in the Latham report. The report will be discussed at a meeting of the construction industry's standing strategic group, which is chaired by my right hon. Friend, on 7 February.

Conservation Sites

25. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the designation of conservation sites under the European habitats directive.

Sir Paul Beresford: Work is well advanced on a draft list of possible sites which will be published shortly for public consultation in preparation for the submission of a list of candidate special areas of conservation. Formal designation of sites will take place only after agreement has been reached between the Government and the Commission and after the list of those sites has been adopted in accordance with the directive.

Landfill Tax

26. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed landfill tax on the operation of waste landfill sites in residential areas.

Mr. Atkins: The proposed landfill tax is not expected to raise issues which are specific to landfill sites in residential areas. However, we will issue a consultation paper shortly on the detailed operation of the tax, which will provide an opportunity for representations to be made. I will place a copy in the Library in due course.

Air Pollution (London)

29. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about air pollution in London.

Mr. Atkins: Ambient concentrations of sulphur dioxide and lead in London have been declining for many years. Levels of traffic-related pollutants are also expected to decline significantly as catalyst-equipped cars replace older more polluting models in the vehicle parc.

Repossessions

30. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of the number of households likely to lose their home through repossession for mortgage arrears in the next 12 months.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Construction output began to increase last year after three and a half years of decline. New orders are increasing and growth is expected to continue.

The latest state of the construction industry report is currently being produced jointly by the Department of the Environment and representatives of the construction industry. Copies will be placed in the Library in due course.

Environmental Protection

32. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in environmental protection over the last year.

Sir Paul Beresford: A full account will be given in this year's annual report on "This Common Inheritance", which we will publish in the spring. It will report progress during 1994 both on the commitments in the environment White Paper series and on those in the sustainable development strategy published in January 1994.

Retail Development

33. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect on consumer choice and price competition of encouraging new retail development in the centre of our towns and cities.

Mr. Gummer: Locating new retail developments in or on the edge of town centres ensures that they are accessible to the largest number of people. This enables comparison shopping to be made, thereby increasing choice for all consumers and price competition.

Ministerial Visits

34. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what visits he has recently received from eastern European water Ministers.

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend has received no recent visits from any eastern European water ministers, nor from any eastern European environment ministers with responsibility for water interests.

Single Regeneration Budget

35. Ms Corston: To ask the Ssecretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for a second round of bidding for the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend announced on 5 December 1994 that a second bidding round of the single regeneration budget will be launched later this year, under which £40 million will be available in 1996–97 for early funding of approved bids and £200 million in 1997–98.

Air Pollution (Eastern Europe)

36. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution the United Kingdom Government are making to improving air pollution in eastern Europe.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom is a signatory, along with other states including those from Eastern Europe, of the United National Economic Commission for Europe convention on long range transboundary air pollution and plays an active part in the convention's various subsidiary bodies. Protocols under the convention control a range of air pollutants from sources within eastern and western Europe. The United Kingdom has made voluntary contributions to a UNECE trust fund to facilitate the participation of Eastern European countries in relevant meetings and in the convention.

In addition to its contribution to multilateral programmes of assistance to central and eastern Europe, the United Kingdom has also established the environmental know-how fund, which includes projects to combat air pollution in central and eastern Europe. Help is also being given for the restructuring of the energy sector in central and eastern European countries, with benefits to the environment, under the main know-how fund.

Legislation

37. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new items of legislation affecting the work of his Department have been introduced as Government Bills since 1979.

Mr. Gummer: Since 1979, there have been 79 Acts of Parliament on subjects for which the Department of the Environment is currently responsible. Of these, 64 were Government Bills, including 12 consolidation Bills. The remainder were introduced as private Member's Bills.

38. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to put the River Thames to better use for residents and tourists.

Mr. Gummer: I shall shortly publish the report of the study of the Thames that I announced last year. Leisure plc

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to require Leisure plc to conform to the requirements of the Audit Commission Publication of Information (Standards of Performance) direction 1994.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The requirements of the Publication of Information (Standards of Performance) direction, issued by the Audit Commission, apply to the local authority irrespective of whether the services are provided by the council or are contracted out to the private sector. We have no plans to review these arrangements.

Private Landlords

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to require private landlords to meet the same standards as local authorities are required to meet under the Audit Commission Publication of Information (Standards of Performance) direction 1994.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None. It would not be appropriate to apply to private landlords the publication requirements imposed on public sector bodies.

(2) what assessment he has made of run-off from the land as a proportion of the annual rainfall in England and Wales and by water authority for the year 1964, 1970, 1980 and 1990.

Mr. Atkins: The available data, which are not in precisely the form sought, are published annually in "Hydrological Data UK" by the Institute of Hydrology and the British Geological Survey.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations underlay his decision to increase capping limits for county councils for 1995–96 by less than the predicted rate of inflation.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The considerations were set out in my right hon. Friend's statement on the local finance settlement on 1 December, Official Report, column 1333.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the level of local government expenditure in Blyth Valley in each year since 1988.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is as follows:

Blyth Valley expenditure[1]

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average level of public, private and housing association rents for each year since 1979.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The available information is given in the table:

Tyne and Wear

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what impact the work of the Tyne and Wear development corporation has had on employment levels in the shipbuilding, ship repair, heavy engineering, offshore and mining industries in Tyne and Wear.

Sir Paul Beresford: Since its inception, the Tyne and Wear development corporation has made strenuous efforts to assist the shipbuilding, ship repair, heavy engineering, offshore and mining sectors. It has given support worth £3.1 million to companies and initiatives that have created or safeguarded 3,300 jobs in these sectors.

Water

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of removing sediment and treating discoloured water in reservoirs in (a) the uplands and (b) the lowlands of England and Wales (a) in total and (b) by water authority in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not held centrally.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the absenteeism rate for his Department in each year since 1991.

Sir Paul Beresford: The table shows for each year the number of days lost through sick absence per member of staff and the percentage of the working days in the year which the days of absence represent.

Year	Average days lost per member of staff	Percentage of working days lost
1991	9.3	4.1
1992	9.5	4.2
1994	9.0	4.0

The table excludes the staff of the Building Research Establishment, The Buying Agency, the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre and the Security Facilities Executive. The figures relate only to staff currently employed by the Department: information for staff who left the Department during the period is not readily available.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the absenteeism rate for the Buying Agency in each year since 1991.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information available is:

Year	Percentage of working days lost through sick absences (Self Certified and Certified)
1991	3.0
1992	3.6
1993	4.2
1994	3.4

Tenant Deposits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many tenants under the age of 21 years were unable to recover deposits from their former landlords in 1993 and 1994;

(2) how many students in full-time education were unable to recover tenant deposits in 1993 and 1994;

(3) how many took legal action against former landlords for non-repayment of tenant deposits in 1993 and 1994;

(4) how many landlords refused to return tenant deposits in 1993 and 1994;

(5) what assessment has been made of the number of tenant deposits that were not returned in 1993 and 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The arrangements for holding and return of deposits for private tenancies are for negotiation between the landlord and tenant at the outset of the tenancy. Although we are aware that problems with the return of deposits sometimes arise, we have no figures on the number of cases where deposits have been withheld or action has been taken.

Dioxins and Furans

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the contamination by (a) dioxins and (b) furans in each local government area in England and Wales; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Atkins: No assessment has been made by local government area, as this would be prohibitively expensive. However, a general assessment has been made of contamination, including dioxins and furans, in soil across England and Wales on a 50 km grid basis. This was published in November 1989 by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. A programme was also started in 1991 measuring various micropollutants in air, which includes dioxins and furans, in five towns and cities.

Private Rented Housing

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of the demand of student rented housing on the availability of private rented housing for non-students.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None. The composition of the private rented sector in any locality will be subject to the supply of property available and demand for it. As students comprise only 5 per cent. of households in privately rented accommodation, we have no reason to believe that demand for student housing is likely to make it more difficult for non-students to find accommodation except, perhaps, in a limited number of localities.

Housing in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many councils in England and Wales have introduced a registration scheme for houses in multiple occupation.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Since 30 April 1991, when local authorities were given powers to charge for registering houses in multiple occupation, 49 councils in England have introduced registration schemes. Registration schemes do not necessarily cover the whole of an authority's area, but may be for a specified district. Records for the period prior to 30 April 1991 are incomplete, but we believe that there are a further 19 councils in England operating registration schemes.

The figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has made of the income of the Energy Saving Trust in each year from 1994–95 to the year 2000, and for each year, the percentage of this income to be derived from each identifiable source;

(2) what estimate he has made of the percentage of the income of the Energy Saving Trust to be derived from levies on consumers' fuel bills in each year from 1994–95 levies on consumers' fuel bills in each year from 1994–95 to the year 2000;

(3) what estimate he has made of the expenditure of the Energy Saving Trust in each year from 1994–95 till the year 2000.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Energy Saving Trust is an independent company. The detailed financial implications of its contribution to the Government's climate change programme must properly be a matter for the trust.

Rents

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average rent paid by tenants of private landlords; and what were the equivalent figures for 1978–79 in actual and real terms.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The only figure available for 1978–79 is for median rent, and this measure is used for both years. Estimated private rents in England were a median of £48.50 a week in 1993–94 and £4.75 a week in 1978–79, the latter being equivalent to £13 a week at 1993–94 prices.

These estimates are from the 1993–94 survey of English housing and the 1978–79 private renters survey, and are subject to sampling error.

Housing Association

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Housing Association properties have been built since 1979; how many of these have since been wholly sold to the tenant; how many are part-owned by the tenant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Housing associations built some 253,000 and rehabilitated 173,000 homes between 1979 and the end of June 1994. In the same period, associations sold some 81,500 properties outright to tenants, 28,400 on a shared-ownership basis, and 8,800 under the do-it-yourself shared ownership scheme. Some of these sales were of pre-1979 properties: separate figures for post-1979 properties are not available.

Albert Dock

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will own Albert dock after the Merseyside development corporation ceases to exist; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Merseyside development corporation is looking at a number of options for transferring the freehold. These include setting up a management company in which the freehold would be vested and management arrangements in which all long leaseholders, including the residents' association, would be involved.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed up by an application to join the company concerned.

Sir Paul Beresford: Information on offers of outside employment to staff below grade 3 is not recorded centrally in this Department. Since February 1993, no officer at grade 3 or above has reported such an offer, although three officers in these grades have applied under the business appointment rules to take up posts after retirement.

Air Quality

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to promote further improvement in air quality.

Mr. Gummer: I am publishing a wide-ranging statement of the Government's strategic policies for improving air quality at 9 am tomorrow, when copies will be placed in the Vote Office and the Libraries of the House.

Environment Council

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 15 and 16 December 1994.

Mr. Gummer: I attended the Environment Council in Brussels on 15 and 16 December with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside. The Council reached a common position on the directive on polychlorinated biphenyls in a form acceptable to the United Kingdom. The Council decided by a qualified majority on a list of hazardous waste as required by directive 91/689. The UK and Italy voted against because the list contains wastes which, under certain circumstances, are not hazardous, and thereby contrary to the directive.

Council conclusions were agreed on a Community strategy to reduce carbon dioxide emissions, which, inter alia, reflected the view reached at the European summit at Essen on the possibility of an optional carbon and energy tax. Council conclusions were also agreed on the preparation of an EU position for the first conference of the parties to the framework convention on climate change.

During the discussion of the Commission's annual report on the implementation of Community law my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside emphasised the need to consider the effectiveness of existing Community legislation in the real world and suggested that there should be an assessment of each piece of environmental legislation to see how successful it had been in meeting its objectives.

There were helpful discussions to prepare the EU position for the next meeting of the Commission for sustainable development and on the draft biocides directive. Council conclusions were also agreed on transport and the environment following a useful debate during which I highlighted the very positive measures which the UK Government have already taken in this area.

Regional Enterprise Grants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what resources will be available for the regional enterprise grants scheme in 1995–96.

Mr. Curry: The regional enterprise grant scheme will continue to operate on the basis of existing criteria in 1995–96 as part of the single regeneration budget. A maximum of £13.7 million will be available for existing and new commitments during the year.

EDUCATION

Pupil-to-teacher Ratios

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the pupil-to-teacher ratio as at January 1994 for each local education authority in (a) the primary sector, (b) the secondary sector and (c) overall.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the table.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her latest estimate of the number of surplus places in primary and secondary schools in (a) Nottinghamshire and (b) England.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on Friday 9 December 1994, Official Report, columns 410–14.

Book and Equipment Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent by each local education authority on books and equipment in 1993–94 prices in (a) 1979–80 and (b) 1993–94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table sets out expenditure in 1993–94 prices by LEAs in England on books and equipment at LEA-maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in 1979–80 and 1992–93, the latest year for which figures are available. These figures are drawn from LEAs' own returns of their expenditure to the Department of the Environment. Equivalent information is not available for grant-maintained schools.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff in her Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Forth: Since February 1993, nine staff in this Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer, as required under the civil service management code. In each case, applications have been made to join the company concerned.

Ministerial Visits, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is the purpose of her visit in March to Bradford city technology college; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will visit local authority schools when she visits Bradford in March;

(3) how many invitations to visit maintained schools in Bradford she has received since her appointment from (a) the hon. Member for Bradford, West and (b) Bradford local education authority; and what has been her response to those invitations;

(4) how many of (a) her predecessors, (b) Ministers from her Department and (c) other Ministers have visited Bradford city technology college since it opened.

Mr. Robin Squires: My right hon. Friend will be visiting Dixons city technology college in Bradford on 1 March. She likes to visit schools when time permits and this will be her first visit to a CTC. A programme for the day has yet to be settled but my right hon. Friend very much looks forward to visiting local authority schools if this can be arranged.

Between July and November last year, my right hon. Friend received three invitations from the hon. Member and three from the local authority to visit schools in Bradford. Other pressures ruled out an early visit to Bradford and many other parts of the country. My right hon. Friend did, however, meet the hon. Member and representatives of Bradford local education authority on 26 September in London and my hon. Friend the Member for Mid Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) made a full day's visit to local authority schools in Bradford in November 1993.

Dixons city technology college opened in September 1990 and has been visited by two previous Secretaries of State for Education, including for the occasion of the official opening. It has also been visited by my right hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar).

Voluntary-aided Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will update the table of underspending and overspending on grants to voluntary-aided schools published on 28 January 1994, Official Report, columns 413-14, to include the relevant figures for 1993–94; what changes have been made to her Department's approval, monitoring and in-year reallocation procedures; to what extent such changes have contributed to any reduction in 1993–94 underspending; and whether there are reasons to expect either underspending or overspending to be reported for 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: Details of aided school capital and repair grant budget provision, final outturn and percentage of underspend or overspend for the years 1990–91 to 1993–94 are as follows:

Year	Budget £ million	Outturn £ million	Per cent. under/overspend
Repairs:
1990–91	35	41.8	19 overspend
1991–92	47.5	49.1	3 overspend
1992–93	55	36.8	33 underspend
1993–94	48	37	23 underspend
Capital:
1990–91	71	64	10 underspend
1991–92	84.2	63.9	24 underspend
1992–93	96.6	81.3	16 underspend
1993–94	84[1]	79.5	[1]3 underspend

[1] £2 million was transferred in year to GM schools capital budget to meet commitments for projects at voluntary aided schools which became grant-maintained during the year. The percentage rate of underspend shown is therefore based on a budget figure of £82 million.

A number of detailed changes have been introduced to the Department's internal procedures and these are being reviewed further in preparation for the introduction of a new computer system in the course of the next financial year. Administrative work relating to the approval of building projects has been moved from London to Darlington and integrated with the work of grant allocation and monitoring. A series of seminars has been held to improve LEA and voluntary bodies' understanding of the grants system and procedures that they must follow. The comments of seminar delegates on the existing system are being taken into account. Detailed written guidance setting out procedures will shortly be issued to schools, LEAs and voluntary bodies.

In the current year the latest estimate is for a small overspend on the capital budget, balanced by a similar underspend on the repair budget, but my hon. Friend will be aware that a high proportion of grant falls to be paid near the end of the financial year.

Allowing for the fact that the expenditure is responsive to demand, I believe that the procedural changes introduced over the last two years have made an important contribution to the reduced underspend in 1993–94 and to the improvement which is in prospect for the current year.

Education Information

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to require privately operated schools (a) to provide and (b) to publish the same information as local authority schools are obliged to provide under the Publication of Information (Standards of Performance) direction 1994.

Mr. Forth: I am not aware of this direction. The proprietors of independent schools are required by the Education (School Performance Information) (England) Regulations 1994 to provide information identical to that provided by maintained schools for publication in the annual school and college performance tables.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) males and (b) females remanded in custody in 1994 spent (i) up to one week, (ii) one to two weeks, (iii) two to four weeks, (iv) four to eight weeks, (v) eight weeks to three months, (vi) three to six months, (vii) six months to 12 months and (viii) over 12 months in prison before their case was concluded; how many were found not guilty in each section; and what were the figures for each year since 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General for the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many (a) males and (b) females remanded in custody in 1994 spent (a) up to one week, (b) one to two weeks, (c) two to four weeks, (d) four to eight weeks, (e) eight weeks to three months, (f) three to six months, (g) six months to 12 months and (h) over 12 months in prison before their court case was concluded; how many were found guilty in each section; and what were the figures for each year since 1990.

The readily available information is given in the attached tables, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. I regret that no information is available on the numbers found not guilty.

AIDS Advisory Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the recommendations made by the Prison Service AIDS advisory committee; and when he expects to respond.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 18 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about publishing the recommendations made by the Prison Service AIDS Advisory Committee.

The report of the Committee and its recommendations are extensive and require careful consideration. It is not yet possible to provide a response date.

A copy of the report will be placed in the Library of the House once decisions on the recommendations have been reached.

HM Prison, Everthorpe

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the recommended establishment of inmates that HM Prison, Everthorpe should hold; what it was when the prison was opened; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list by category the number of inmates held at HM Prison, Everthorpe on 2 January; what the figures were for each year since 1990: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matter has been delegated to the Director General for the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about Everthorpe prison.

Everthorpe had previously held young offenders but was converted to hold 304 adult prisoners and re-opened in October 1991. In July 1994 a new education block was built and the original one converted into a hostel for up to 14 prisoners, bringing its potential capacity to 318. Between 1991 and 1994 work to upgrade the accommodation, including installing toilets in cells, meant that on average about 75 per cent. of the cells were usable.

On 2 January this year there were 229 category C and 32 category D prisoners at Everthorpe. It is not possible to distinguish between those categories for earlier years. On the same date in each of the five years to 1994 the number of prisoners at Everthorpe was 344, 252, 169, 222 and 216 respectively.

The Home Secretary has already made a statement about Everthorpe prison in his speech of 10 January [Hansard Col. 31].

Drug Addicts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each metropolitan borough council in south Yorkshire, how many children were identified as drug addicts in each year since 1988 by type of drug; and what assessment he has made of the incidence of drug addiction amongst children in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the Misuse of Drugs (Notification of and Supply to Addicts) Regulations 1973, doctors are required only to notify the Home Office if they attend persons they know, or have reasonable grounds to suspect, are addicted to cocaine or any of 13 opiate drugs. Since 1988, the Home Office has received only one such notification from south Yorkshire—Rotherham—for a child under the age of 16 which referred to an addiction to cocaine.

Diamorphine

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many doctors currently prescribe diamorphine for drug addicts in each metropolitan borough council in south Yorkshire; and what were the figures for each year since 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the provisions of the Misuse of Drugs (Notification of and Supply to Addicts) Regulations 1973, as amended, doctors may be licensed to prescribe diamorphine in the treatment of addiction. Currently available records, from 1991 only, indicate that no applications have been received from doctors in any of the south Yorkshire metropolitan borough councils.

Europol Database

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the legal status of the proposed Europol large database in The Hague; by whom and by what mechanism it is controlled; what transfers of United Kingdom information and data to Europol are proposed; what proposals there are for inaccurate data to be accessed, challenged and corrected; what legislation is required to facilitate United Kingdom involvement in the project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Europol drugs unit in The Hague is based on the ministerial agreement signed by Ministers of the interior and justice in Copenhagen in June 1993. It has no central database. Negotiations are continuing on the draft convention, which will establish the full Europol. A draft text was submitted for scrutiny on 17 November 1994.

Prison Riots

Mrs Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where and when riots have occurred in prisons, over the last 10 years for which figures are available; and what has been the cost of repairing damage caused and of relocating prisoners in each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 18 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the occurrence of riots in prisons over the last ten years and the cost of repairing damage caused and of relocating prisoners in each case.

The number of disturbances since 1984 are shown in the table below:

Year	Number
1984–85[1]	38
1985–86	38
1986–87	45
1987–88	42
1988–89	67
1989–90	67
1990–91	105
1991–92	149
1992–93	142
1993–94	146
1994–13/1/95	96

[1] For this year only the figures are for a 15 month period.

The attached tables provide details of:

(a) the more serious disturbances since 1988; and

(b) the cost of building repair work

We have been able to obtain detailed information on disturbances before June 1988.

In some cases where serious damage was caused, the opportunity was taken to refurbish beyond merely repairing the damage caused by a disturbance. This might mean refurbishing a complete wing or, in the case of Manchester, refurbishment of the whole prison. Where this occurred, it is shown on the table.

The cost involved in transferring prisoners to other establishments as a result of a serious disturbance is not available centrally.

Armed Response Units

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police authorities currently have armed response units;

(2) how many non-fatal injuries have resulted from the deployment of armed response units in each police authority area in each of the past five years;

(3) how many members of armed response units have been killed or injured in each police authority area in each of the last five years;

(4) how many deaths have resulted from the deployment of armed response units in each police authority area in each of the past five years;

(5) how many people have been killed or injured by police marksmen in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: The following information is available centrally. On 31 December 1993, 33 of the 43 police forces in England and Wales operated armed response vehicles. The number of people killed or injured as a result of shots fired by authorised police firearms officers, including armed response vehicle officers, in England and Wales between 1984 and 1993—figures for 1994 are not yet available—was as follows:

None was killed. Corresponding figures are not centrally available for the rest of England and Wales although statistics for notifiable offences in which a police officer on duty was injured by a firearm are set out in table 3A of the published criminal statistics for England and Wales 1993, Cmnd 2680.

News International

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last two years immigration officials have visited or contacted the News International plant in Wapping; and what has been the outcome.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Details of contacts made with commercial organisations by the divisions and directorates in the immigration and nationality department of the Home Office are not collated centrally and the information requested is not, therefore available.

Immigration

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend his policy on family reunion for people granted exceptional leave to remain; and what representations he has received on this subject.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Representations have been received from the Refugee Council, United Nations Association and representatives of religious organisation, but we have no plans to amend our policy.

Police, Northumberland

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the ratio of police officers to (a) population and (b) crimes in the Northumberland police authority area.

Mr. Maclean: The report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary for 1993 gives a ratio of one police officer to every 399 persons in Northumbria.

Taking recorded crime for the year to June 1994 and force establishment at 30 June 1994, there were 58 crimes per police officer in Northumbria.

Prison Suicides

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides there were in prisons in each year since 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General for the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about suicides in prison.

Mr. Maclean: Information for the age groups 10 to 15 and 16 to 20 is given in the table. Children below the age of 10—the age of criminal responsibility—may not be found guilty of an offence.

Family Reunion Applications

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have at present applied for family reunion; and how many of these applications are from people who (a) have applied for asylum, (b) have been given exceptional leave to remain and (c) have been given refugee status.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on the number of applications for family reunion from persons seeking asylum, persons recognised as refugees and persons refused asylum but granted exceptional leave to remain is not available.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for granting family reunion for people on exceptional leave to remain and be given refugee status; what is the average wait for an application for family reunification; and how many applications are currently outstanding.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Persons who have been recognised as refugees in the United Kingdom are eligible to be joined immediately by their spouses and minor children under the family reunion concession. Applications are considered under the immigration rules, but maintenance and accommodation requirements which are applied to other immigration cases, are waived for refugees.

Applications for family reunion from the spouse and minor children of a person on exceptional leave will usually be granted after four years, subject to the general requirements of the immigration rules on the admission of spouses and dependants, including those relating to maintenance and accommodation. An application for family reunion may be granted earlier if there are compelling compassionate circumstances. Information on the average wait for an application for family reunification and the number of applications outstanding is not available.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals in Great Britain" for (a) 1993 and (b) 1994 will be published.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Command Paper "Statistics of Scientific Procedures performed on living animals, Great Britain, 1993" is to be published on 26 January. The next similar Command Paper, containing information relating to scientific procedures started in 1994, is expected to be published towards the end of July 1995.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will define the categories of experiments on living animals which would fall within the most severe classification; how many applications for licensed experiments for (a) medical and (b) non-medical were under the most severe classifications; and how many applications for experiments in each security category were made in 1993.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Scientific procedures are regarded as being of substantial severity if they result in a major departure from the animal's usual state of health or well-being. These are likely to include acute toxicity procedures where significant morbidity or death is the end point, some efficacy tests of antimicrobial agents and vaccines, some models of disease, and major surgery where significant post-operative suffering may result.

In 1993, project licence applications in each severity category were submitted: mild, 614; moderate, 743; substantial, 21; unclassified, terminally anaesthetised or decerebrated animals, nine.

Fourteen of the licences assessed as of overall substantial severity were relevant to human medicine, one to veterinary medicine and six to non-medical topics.

Election Fraud

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to improve election processes to reduce the possibility of fraud.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: A review established after the 1992 general election has identified a number of detailed improvements in election procedures, including improvements aimed at reducing the possibility of fraud. As a result of this work, new absent voting application forms have been produced to reduce the risk of fraudulent proxy appointments. We have no proposals for further changes.

Family Reunion Policies

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the latest developments regarding harmonisation of family reunion policies across the EU.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: EC immigration Ministers agreed the terms of a resolution on the harmonisation of family reunification policies in Copenhagen in June 1993. There have been no developments since then.

Public Houses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licensed public houses there were in (a) North Yorkshire (b) South Yorkshire, (c) West Yorkshire, (d) Humberside and (e) the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information by county is given in the table. This information is collected only every three years for each licensing area in England and Wales. Figures are produced and published for each county for the year of collection along with a total for England and Wales for the previous year.

[1] Includes public houses and hotels etc. (other than those licensed under Part IV of the Licensing Act 1964) having a justices' on-licence which authorises the sale of intoxicating liquor for consumption on or off the premises, unless a condition is attached to the licence prohibiting off-sales.

Drugs, Blyth Valley

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what strategies he is currently promoting to tackle drug problems in Blyth valley; and if he will make it his policy to introduce further measures.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's overall strategy for tackling drug misuse is aimed at reducing the supply of and demand for drugs throughout the United Kingdom. From 1 April, the area covered by the local drugs prevention team in Newcastle is being extended to the whole of Northumberland and Tyne and Wear, including Blyth valley.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on access to travel documents for asylum seekers granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom; what representations he has received about access to travel documents; and what is the average wait to obtain such documents.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I am satisfied that the policy on access to travel documents for asylum seekers granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom, which was introduced on 1 January 1994, allows those who cannot obtain a passport from their own authorities to be issued with such documents. I receive a number of representations from hon. Members, representative organisations and individuals about particular cases. A wide variety of factors influences the time taken to issue travel documents. However, applications on which no further enquiries are necessary are generally completed within eight weeks of receipt in the immigration and nationality department.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what arrangements he has with the French authorities to return to France persons refused asylum in the United Kingdom on safe third country grounds;

(2) what arrangements he has with the German authorities to return to Germany persons refused asylum in the United Kingdom on safe third country grounds.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: There is close liaison with the French and German authorities over the return of persons refused asylum on safe third country grounds in accordance with the immigration rules.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations has been given by his Department and other interested Government Departments to the establishment of a national agency to manage the custody and supervision of persistent juvenile offenders as recommended in the sixth report of the Home Affairs Committee (HC 441) of Session 1992–93.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office is considering this recommendation against the background of charges to the law on juvenile offenders contained in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications have been lodged with the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority since 1 April 1994;

(2) what has been the administrative cost of considering all applications to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority since 1 April 1994;

(3) how many awards have been made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority since 1 April 1994; and in which of the tariff bands those awards fell.

Mr. Maclean: In the period 1 April 1994 to 12 January 1995, 49,065 applications were registered by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority.

Total expenditure on administration of the compensation scheme in the period 1 April 1994 to 31 December 1994 was £11.1 million. It is not possible, at this time, to give a breakdown of that expenditure as between CICB, in respect of applications received before 1 April 1994 CICA, in respect of applications received on or after 1 April 1994 and the appeals panel.

CICA offered the following awards in the period 1 April 1994 12 January 1995:

Director General of the Prison Service

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how performance-related pay bonuses for the Director General of the Prison Service are calculated; and by whom.

Mr. Howard: The performance of the Director General of the Prison Service is assessed on the basis of both qualitative and quantitative measures. They reflect the Prison Service's key targets, as set out in the agency's corporate and business plans, copies of which are in the Library. The details of the arrangements for assessing the performance of the Director General are personal to him and I have no plans to publish them. I decide what performance bonus the Director General should receive on advice from the Permanent-Secretary of the Department.

Immigration Detainees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost to the Home Office in the financial year 1993–94 of detaining persons under Immigration Act powers; and if he will provide a breakdown of these costs.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The total cost to the immigration service of running its detention accommodation in the financial year 1993–94 was £7,466,352. This comprises:

Detention, escort and related costs paid to contractors	5,132,900
Running costs, including accommodation charges	1,065,106
IS staff costs	912,454
Capital expenditure	355,892

Information about the costs of immigration detention in police cells and Prison Service establishments is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the number of asylum seekers currently detained under Immigration Act powers by (a) nationality, (b) gender, (c) length of detention, (d) place of detention and (e) immigration status at the time of application.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: At 13 January 1995, a total of 572 people who had sought asylum were detained. This figure includes people awaiting the setting of directions for removal following refusal of the application, as well as those whose application was under consideration or subject to appeal. Of this figure, 138 had been in detention less than one month, 97 between one and two months, 237 between two and six months and 100 had been in detention longer than six months.

Information on the gender, immigration status, nationality and location of detention is given in tables A - B and C.

Prison Escapes

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many escaped prisoners are currently at large.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 18 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of escaped prisoners currently at large.

This information has only been recorded centrally since 20 June 1988. From that date to 13 January this year (inclusive) 123 prisoners who escaped are still unlawfully at large.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many escaped prisoners from prisons in the Greater London regions are currently at large; how long each has been at large; what offences each has been convicted of; from which prison each escaped; and whether each has escaped before.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 18 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners who have escaped from prisons in the Greater London area and who are still currently at large; their offences; the prisons from which they escaped; the length of time they have been at large and whether those prisoners had escaped before.

The information you request has only been recorded centrally since 20 June 1988. The table below gives the relevant details of the seven prisoners who escaped between 20 June 1988 and 13 January this year (inclusive) and who are still at large:

Date of escape	Establishment	Offence	Length of time at large
17 November 1989	Feltham	Burglary	5 years 2 months
2 February 1992	Downview	Importation of Drugs	2 years 11 months
8 November 1992	Downview	Importation of Drugs	2 years 2 months
4 September 1993	Downview	Importation of Drugs	1 year 4 months
23 October 1993	Feltham	Robbery	1 year 3 months
30 August 1994	Downview	Robbery	4 months
1 January 1995	Wandsworth	Burglary	2 weeks

Information on whether any of them had previously escaped is not recorded centrally.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Howard: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. Details of the number of offers received by staff below grade 3 are not recorded centrally. Staff in these grades are required only to report any offers—and, in the case of procurement and contracts staff, any approaches—received from prospective employers to a senior member of staff at least two grades higher.

Since February 1993, there have been 10 applications under the business appointment rules by Home Office staff for permission to take up offers of employment from outside employers on leaving Crown service. In the same period, three additional members of staff reported offers of employment which did not require an application under the rules. In each case, the report was followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Crime Victims (Compensation)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the totals of compensation paid to the victims of crime in each of the past 10 years; and what he expects it to be in each of the next three years.

Mr. Maclean: The amounts of compensation paid under the criminal injuries compensation scheme in the last 10 years, and the forecast expenditure in the next three years are as follows:

Year	Compensation paid/payable £ million
1984–85	35
1985–86	42
1986–87	48
1987–88	52
1988–89	69
1989–90	73
1990–91	109
1991–92	144
1992–93	152
1993–94	165
1994–95	178
1995–96	180
1996–97	142
1997–98	144

It is expected that by the year 2000–01 the amount of compensation payable will exceed £200 million.

Electric Shock Equipment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Royal Ordnance possesses or has possessed a section 5 permit allowing it to hold electric shock weapons.

Mr. Maclean: Electric shock weapons are covered by section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968, as amended, which prohibits the unauthorised possession of any weapon of whatever description designed or adapted for the discharge of any noxious liquid, gas or other thing. Royal Ordnance holds authority under section 5(1)(b) of the 1968 Act. The terms of this authority are currently under review.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence), Official Report, 20 December, columns 1213–14, what was the voting record of each member state on items agreed at the meeting of the European Community's Justice and Home Affairs Council held on 30 November and 1 December; and if he will make it his practice to include details of all votes in future.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 January 1995]: The items agreed by the Justice and Home Affairs Council were adopted by unanimity, in accordance with the relevant provision of title VI of the treaty on European Union. Although there are possibilities under title VI for the Council to decide procedural matters and certain implementing measures by majority voting, substantive matters can be decided only by unanimity.

Disturbance (Everthorpe)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the findings of the report on the disturbances at Everthorpe on 2 and 3 January; and if will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library a summary of the findings and the conclusions of the report together with a report of the action that is being taken in response.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, columns 265-66, what was the number and cost of (a) first–class tickets, (b) business–class tickets and (c) economy–class tickets for overseas flights paid for by the Overseas Development Administration in each of the last three years.

Mr. Goodlad: The details for overseas flights in respect of ODA in 1993 and 1994 are:

Class of travel	Number	Cost £
1993
First Class	13	45,400
Business Class	800	717,291
Economy Class	57	28,403
1994 (January to October)
First Class	12	28,661
Business Class	628	576,375
Economy Class	41	18,597

For travel in 1992, it is not possible to provide a breakdown by class and mode of travel, nor is it possible to distinguish between overseas and domestic travel. Total expenditure on official travel by UK–based Ministers and officials in the ODA that year was £791,094.

The proportion of business class flights reflects the long-distance nature of much of ODA's travel.

WALES

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between his departmental Ministers and agencies.

Mr. Redwood: I am responsible for Cadw and Welsh historic monuments and I have joint responsibility for the planning inspectorate and ADAS agencies, as set out in the published framework documents.

Suckler Cow Premiums

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the Welsh Office agriculture department released the first suckler cow premiums advance subsidy cheques to Welsh farmers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: On 24 November 1994.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the reasons for the problems experienced by the Welsh Office Agriculture Department in the payment of suckler cow premium during 1994 and the particularly long delays for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Delays in making payments for the 1993 scheme were due to the establishment of a new computer system, when the making of payments was transferred from the MAFF centre at Guildford to the Welsh Office.

Payments under the 1994 scheme commenced in November 1994.

Business Rates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the likely increase in business rates in Wales arising from the five-year review announced in the Chancellor's Budget speech.

Mr. Redwood: The estimated average increase in 1995–96 rate bills for property on the local rating list is 4 per cent.

VAT (Tourism)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement of the effect on jobs, rural energy and areas dependent on tourism of the extension of VAT to cover tourism activities and entrance fees to tourist sites.

Mr. Redwood: The application of VAT is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who announced on 29 November that services relating to entertainment or recreational activities and car parking at airports, which include passenger transport, will become wholly standard rated. The measure will affect a limited range of businesses in Wales.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 rules regarding transfer of council employees to reorganised local authorities apply to all county and district councils in Wales; what representations he has received on the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Whether or not the TUPE regulations apply depends on the circumstances of each case. My hon. Friend and I have made it clear on a number of occasions that we will include in the staff transfer order staff whose contracts of employment are considered to be protected under TUPE, but that we do not believe that all local government staff will fall into this category.

The staff commission for Wales wrote to me on 8 December suggesting that, in order to ensure equal treatment of employees of county and district councils, all staff who wish to transfer should be transferred. My hon. Friend and I have received a large number of representations from hon. Members, councils and others in support of the staff commission's letter.

We hope to give our response shortly.

"People and Prosperity: A Challenge to Wales"

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on measures taken to implement the proposals of the Welsh Office document "People and Prosperity: A Challenge to Wales".

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend will publish an action plan early this year to follow up "People and Prosperity". This will set out the action needed to raise standards, make faster progress towards the national targets for education and training and promote a culture of learning and enterprise.

Departmental Creche Facilities

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new plans he has to provide creche facilities to staff in his Department.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 10 January 1995 Official Report, column 50.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Redwood: Since February 1993, three staff in my Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer and each was followed by an application to join the company concerned.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1994, Official Report, column 367, if he will now publish information for 1993–94 on general practitioner fundholders savings.

Mr. Richards [holding answer 17 January 1995]: The amount retained for the financial year 1993–94 was £4,470,000. This will be used by general practitioner fundholders for the benefit of their patients.

NHS Redundancy Payments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost of redundancy payments to NHS staff in each of the last five years.

Mr. Richards [holding answer 17 January 1995]: The information requested is as follows:

Gross redundancy payments to NHS staff

1992–93	1,496

Fraud

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount of money was recovered through investigations into social security fraud in the last financial year; and how many staff were employed on these duties.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The administration of fraud work is a matter for Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 17 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the amount of money recovered through fraud investigations in the last financial year and the staff employed on these duties.

Over 3,000 staff are involved in the investigation of benefit fraud.

Estimated benefit savings, from fraud identified and stopped during 1993–94, were £654m. The value of overpaid benefit actually recouped, including fraud cases, totalled £80m. Information relating to the amount of benefit recovered directly as a result of anti-fraud work is not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Fraud Allegations

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will total the number of instances where information from non-custodial parents alleging social security fraud by the parent with care has (a) been reported to the Child Support Agency and (b) been referred to the Benefits Agency for action; and what has been the outcome of these investigations, in respect of each three months of the CSA's existence.

Mr. Burt: It is not a business requirement of the Child Support Agency to keep statistics centrally on allegations of benefit fraud as any such allegation is referred to the Benefits Agency for investigation. Statistics provided by the BA on the numbers of cases referred by the CSA and those investigations which subsequently yielded a weekly benefit saving are as follows:

	April–June 1994	July–September 1994	October–November 1994[2]	Total April–November 1994
Referrals[1]	2,897	2,664	2,049	7,610
Cases yielding WBS	1,131	1,086	748	2,961
Percentage	39	41	37	39

[1] No information is kept on the origins of an allegation eg: Absent Parent, Parent with Care or other.
[2] Two months only.

Doncaster and Mexborough Benefit Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many invalidity benefit awards have been (a) reviewed, (b) disallowed following review and (c) reinstated on appeal during the last 12 months in each of the Doncaster and Mexborough area Benefits Agency offices.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 17 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Invalidity Benefit (IVB) awards in Doncaster and Mexborough.

The Benefits Agency (BA) Doncaster District comprises Doncaster West District Office (DO) and Doncaster East Benefit Office (BO). Reviews of IVB cases appropriate to the Doncaster District are centralised at Doncaster West DO.

Mexborough BO is part of the BA Rother and Dearne District which comprises Rotherham South DO and Goldthorpe, Mexborough and Rotherham North BO's. Reviews of IVB cases for customers dealt with by Mexborough BO are dealt with at that office.

The information requested is provided in the following table:

IVB awards reviewed between 1 January and 31 December 1994

Office	IVB awards reviewed and disallowed	IVB awards reinstated on appeal
Doncaster DO	616	126
Mexborough BO	260	55

Requests for review were received by the Adjudication Officer (AO) in 707 cases at Doncaster and 383 at Mexborough. Of those cases, the AO decided that in 91 cases at Doncaster and 123 at Mexborough the requirements for entitlement to IVB were still satisfied and IVB should not be reviewed. However, in the remaining cases the AO decided that the award of IVB should be reviewed and disallowed.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the full costs of the Government's current campaign on disability; and if he will break down the expenditure by category of advertisement and publication.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of disabled people in the United Kingdom; how that figure is arrived at; when it was last calculated and by what method; when he plans to update the figure; and what definition of disabled people is used for the calculation of these figures.

Mr. Hague: All the information is contained in the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys, surveys on disability in Great Britain published between September 1988 and July 1989, copies of which are held in the Library. No date has been set for a further survey.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of pensioners who are in receipt of (a) income support and (b) housing benefit.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table:

	Number
Income Support recipient with pensioner premiums	1,492,000
Housing Benefit recipients with pensioner premiums	1,977,000

Notes:
— some 900,000 Income Support recipients will also be in receipt of Housing Benefit.
— Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
— a case is defined as being a pensioner if in receipt of the pensioner premium, higher pensioner premium or enhanced pensioner premium.

Income Support

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what circumstances payments of income support are made to persons under 18 years of age; how many such recipients are currently recorded; and what is the average weekly payment to such persons.

Mr. Roger Evans: Young people aged 16 and 17 can claim income support at any time if their circumstances exempt them from the availability for work rules. In addition those who have ceased compulsory education and of necessity have to live independently from their family because they are estranged can claim in the period that their parents would have received child benefit. The young person is required to register unemployed with the Employment Service and for work or training opportunities with the careers service.

Outside the child benefit period, the temporarily sick with supporting medical evidence can claim until fit for work or training, as can recently discharged offenders who are estranged from their family for up to eight weeks, provided they are registered for work and training.

Further, the Secretary of State may direct that income support be paid to any registered young person who is not entitled under the above rules but who would be at risk of unavoidable severe hardship if benefit were withheld. Income support would normally be paid until a job or a Government training place is secured.

The number of income support recipients aged under 18 is 36,000 and the average weekly amount paid is £36.79.

Housing Benefit

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance he will be issuing to local authorities on implementation of the new housing benefit provisions.

Mr. Roger Evans: Details of the changes announced in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's uprating statement on 30 November 1994 were issued to all local authorities in mid-December. Officials are currently discussing the housing benefit proposals with the local authority associations before preparing regulations and detailed guidance, which will be issued to all authorities nearer to the October 1995 implementation date.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Hague: Staff in the Department are required to report job offers to a senior officer at least two grades higher but no such records are kept centrally.

Records that are kept relate to staff who have made an application to take up an outside business appointment. The total for the Department since February 1993 is six.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the actual expenditure total for his Department for the combined years from 1990–91 to 1995–96 in 1994 prices; and what is his estimate of total expenditure assuming that unemployment from 1990–91 to 1995–96 had remained constant at the average unemployment level of 1990–91.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. such information as is available is in the following tables.

Actual expenditure total for Department of Social Security

£ millions

Year	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93
Amount (1994–95 prices)	69,206	75,451	82,975

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Civil Servant Travel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which airlines have been granted preferred carrier status for civil servant travel to overseas destinations.

Mr. Jack: My Department has not granted preferred carrier status to any airline.

Fisheries

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 10 January, Official Report, columns 21-22, if he will make available fuller details of the agreement that was reached on the integration of Spain and Portugal into the common fisheries policy.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Council reached agreement on the basis of documents prepared by the German presidency. It is the intention that legal instruments embodying the agreement should be issued as soon as possible. These will be made available to the House in the usual way. However, in order to facilitate hon. Members' consideration of the matter, I have placed copies of the substance of the agreement in the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement about the offence which will be committed by a Spanish vessel fishing for non–precious stocks in the North sea as a full participant in the common fisheries policy after 1 January 1996;

(2) for what reasons he informed fishermen in his letter after the December Fisheries Council that the exclusion of Spanish fishermen from the North sea would continue unaffected.

Mr. Jack: The recent negotiations on Spain and Portugal confirmed that Spain has acquired no fishing rights in the North sea after 1 January 1996. The decisions reached at the December Fisheries Council on Spanish and Portuguese integration in the common fisheries policy apply only to those waters referred to in their act of accession west of 4 deg west and the English channel. Council regulation 1275/94, article 4, adopted by the Fisheries Council last April, provides a possibility for the Commission to make a proposal granting Spain access to other waters, including the North sea, for non–quota species taking account of track record in a recent and representative period. However, unless and until such a proposal is made, and a Council decision taken on it, it will remain an offence for Spain to fish in the North sea.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what system of reporting is proposed by him for Spanish vessels fishing in the Irish box as a result of the December Fisheries Council agreement; what plans he has for reporting in person to the coastal state on arrival and departure; to whom the vessels will report; and what co-ordination will be developed with Irish authorities.

Mr. Jack: Further to the agreement reached at the December Fisheries Council, detailed plans for the implementation of control measures for the Irish box from 1 January 1996 have still to be developed. These, along with other matters, will be the subject of consultation with the fishing industry and other interested parties.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishermen in (a) Grimsby, (b) Hull and (c) the south-west were sent his letter of explanation after the Fisheries Council; and how the fishermen who received it were selected.

Mr. Jack: My letter explaining the outcome of the December Fisheries Council was sent to recipients of all currently valid licences issued by my Department for fishing vessels over 10m based in England and Wales. At the time that the letter was sent, there were 1,483 such vessels. A separate breakdown of the number of letters sent to people in particular areas could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between his departmental Ministers and agencies.

Mr. Waldegrave: Precise details of the responsibilities and relationships are set out in the various agency framework documents, copies of which are in the Library of the House. In broad terms, agency chief executives report directly to me. Detailed arrangements are in place for the performance of each agency to be monitored through its ownership board which is chaired by a senior official in the core Department.

Veal

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what has been the production of veal in the United Kingdom in each year since 1985;

(2) what has been the consumption of veal in the United Kingdom for each year since 1985.

Mr. Jack: Details of veal production and the veal available for consumption are given in the table.

UK Veal Production and Consumption 1985 to 1993

	Production[1] '000 tonnes	Available for consumption[2] '000 tonnes
1985	5.3	8.1
1987	3.2	4.2

Mr. David Uren

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his review of procedures with regard to the application of the rules of the farm woodland premium scheme as they relate to the growing of coppice by Mr. David Uren.

Mr. Jack: Our legal advice is that the rules of the farm woodland premium scheme, as set out in statutory instrument 1992 No. 905, do not allow for any land converted to woodland to be managed as coppice. We have therefore reviewed the scheme rules and procedures booklet and the standing instructions to the Ministry's regional organisation on administering the scheme, to ensure that this provision is clear and is being applied consistently. The question of whether this rule or other details of the scheme should be changed can be considered as part of the review of the scheme which will begin later this year.

Harvesting Restrictions

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Union regarding the harvesting restrictions imposed on crops grown on land which is coming out of set-aside provision.

Mr. Jack: Marketable food crops can only exceptionally be sown on set-aside land and the clear intention, supported by the text, of both EC and United Kingdom legislation is that the facility can be used only for crops sown for harvesting the following year. No reference to EU authorities is necessary in this case.

Calves

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many dairy calves have been exported from the United Kingdom in each year since 1985;

(2) how many live calves have been exported each year from 1985 (a) for veal production and (b) in total.

Mrs. Browning: The available information, relating to exports from Great Britain, was given in my answer to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 12 January, Official Report, columns 208-10. It is not possible to say what numbers were destined for veal production, or what numbers originated from dairy herds.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what measures were taken for the welfare and alternative transport of calves waiting for export at Coventry airport delayed due to the crash on 21 December 1994 of the transport aircraft,

(2) what reports he has received of calves that died between 1 and 10 January while awaiting export.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The Department is aware of 1,587 calves that were intended to be flown out of Coventry on the day of the air crash or the day following; four exporters were involved.

Our information on these calves is derived from welfare inspections carried out by Ministry veterinary staff at premises where animals were subsequently held, from inspection carried out for certification purposes in relation to animals eventually presented for export and from information obtained from the animals' owners.

Following the unforeseen unavailability of the air route out of Coventry, alternative plans to export some of the calves on the Shoreham-Dieppe route were frustrated or delayed when the opening of the route was delayed first by bad weather and then by demonstrations.

Around 1,070 of the animals were sooner or later retained or sold for rearing in the United Kingdom; 435 were exported through Shoreham on 6 January and Plymouth on 7 January.

We are aware that 51 calves died, apparently from disease. Twenty-seven of these deaths occurred at one holding premises where a further 35 calves were found to be unfit for transport and were humanely slaughtered on the premises.

DEFENCE

Housing, Aldershot

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what opportunities there are for local housing associations to purchase houses or flats no longer needed by his Ministry in Aldershot.

Mr. Soames: My Department has no plans to sell any houses or flats in Aldershot in the foreseeable future.

Military Equipment

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what military needs it was decided that truck-mounted concrete mixers were required, as set out in future purchase No. EM and D1A/150; what consideration has been given to leasing the equipment; what information he has as to the availability of such equipment on the civil market; why there has been a delay in the issue of tenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The two truck-mounted concrete mixers in future purchase No. EM and D1A/150 are for use for construction by the Army on operational deployment. Vehicles that meet the military specification for this requirement are not currently available for leasing or immediate purchase on the civil market. Issue of the tender has been delayed pending finalisation of the specification.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what military needs 39 commercially proven ultra-light dumpers are required as set out in future purchase No. EM and D1A/154; what consideration has been given to leasing the equipment; what information he has as to the availability of such equipment on the civil market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The 39 ultra-light dumpers announced in future purchase No. EM and D1A/154 will be used for military engineering construction and training. This purchase represents a proportion of the overall Army requirement. Leasing was considered but ruled out because of cost and the extensive use of these machines on overseas deployment. The balance of the Army's requirement will be met from short-term hire on an as-required basis.

Rescue Co-ordination Centre

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on when the consultation document on the Air Officer Scotland and Northern Ireland and the location of the rescue co-ordination centre will be published;

(2) whether RAF Kinloss is now being considered as a site for the relocation of the rescue co-ordination centre at Pitreavie and alternative to RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Soames: It remains my Department's plan to relocate the Air Officer Scotland and Northern Ireland to RAF Leuchars, although the future location of the rescue co-ordination centre is under review. I hope to make an announcement shortly. Neither relocation entails any civilian job losses and it is not therefore our intention to issue a formal consultative document. Nevertheless, the trade unions have been, and will continue to be, consulted on our plans.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the Royal Navy on the future of the rescue co-ordination centre at Pitreavie.

Mr. Soames: None.

Pitreavie

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the savings that are expected to accrue from the transfer of Flag Officer Scotland Northern and Northern Ireland from Pitreavie to Faslane, with particular reference to the cost of building an extra floor on the command building at Faslane to accommodate FOSNNI, compared to the maintenance of Pitreavie.

Mr. Soames: The savings accruing from the proposed transfer of FOSNNI from Pitreavie to Faslane are broken down in detail in the consultation document. These savings accrue against the option of maintaining FOSNNI's operations at Pitreavie. Since that date, further planning has revealed that the provision of an extra floor on the command building at Faslane, as opposed to the refurbishment of the building originally proposed to accommodate FOSNNI, may offer additional saving despite the slightly higher works costs—some £600,000—involved. This is currently being evaluated and would be proceeded with only on the basis that it improved or preserved the level of savings set out in the consultation document.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to developing Pitreavie as part of the tri-service communication network.

Mr. Soames: For as long as Pitreavie remains operational, the site will be included as one of the many establishments that the tri-service defence fixed telecommunications system will be required to serve. The development of Pitreavie in this respect would not be required. No broader development of Pitreavie for tri-service communications has been considered.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Freeman: No reports have been made, but offers of employment may have been submitted using the Department's usual application form. Since February 1993, 526 business appointment applications have been received.

Homosexuality

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use is made by the service police of (a) the British Telecom Intelligence Department or (b) the Post Office Investigations Department in investigating allegations of homosexuality among armed forces personnel.

Mr. Soames : None.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the service police use a computer database to cross-reference names in investigations into homosexuality in the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: The only purpose of the computer databases maintained by the service police is to record investigations of service personnel suspected of breaching service law.

Records (Police Access)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what access civilian police have to the records of members of the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: Civilian police do not, as a matter of routine, have access to the records of service personnel. They may, however, request and receive information from service records to assist in their investigations.

SAS Trade and Investments

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the involvement of Royal Ordnance in 1985 in plans to sell anti-riot guns to SAS Trade and Investments.

Mr. Freeman: I have no knowledge of any such involvement.

Lesbians

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what records were kept by his Department in 1989 regarding possible lesbians in the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: The only such records held by my Department would be those relating to investigations into suspected breaches of service law.

Anti-personnel Land Mines

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the failure rates of anti-personnel land mines which are intended to self-destruct or self-neutralise; and what is their purchase cost.

Mr. Freeman: No self-destructing or self-neutralising anti-personnel land mines are in service with the armed forces and no MOD tests have been carried out into their failure rates. Details of their purchase cost are not held by my Department.

Security Conferences

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what delegations from Iran or from the Iranian embassy in London have attended conferences or exhibitions involving the display of defence-related security or paramilitary products in the United Kingdom since March 1993.

Mr. Freeman: Since March 1993, the Ministry of Defence has not invited any delegations from Iran or the Iranian embassy in London to attend such conferences or exhibitions.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Generation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will invite the Director General of Offer (Northern Ireland) to carry out a cost-benefit analysis on the next tranche of electricity generation which will take into account the social, economic and environmental effects on Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: No. Following the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in Northern Ireland responsibility for future generation planning rests with Northern Ireland Electricity plc. Under the terms of its licence NIE is obliged to purchase its power requirements at the most economic price obtainable having regard to the sources available. This enables NIE to consider other aspects such as fuel diversity and security of supply. In doing so, NIE will have to satisfy the independent Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland.

Maze Prison

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what circumstances hacksaws or similar articles have been made available to some prisoners at Her Majesty's prison at the Maze in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: Prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Maze, in common with other prisons in Northern Ireland, have access to a range of approved handicraft materials and tools. These are issued on the basis of the risk they would pose to the security of the prison and the safety of staff. Prison officers carry out regular checks to ensure that all tools are accounted for. No hacksaws are issued.

Home Helps and District Nurses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) home helps and (b) district nurses per 1,000 people over the age of 65 years there were for each of the years 1989 to 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: The information as at 30 June each year is as follows:

Number per 1,000 people aged 65 and over

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Home helps	14.3	12.9	11.3	10.6	9.7
District Nurses	[1]—	2.4	2.2	2.1	1.8

[1] Information prior to 1990 was not collected on a comparable basis.

Disabled Students

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the number of disabled students' awards in each of the last three years; and what has been the cost in each year.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Number of allowances	14	36	75
Cost	16,228	51,532	108,473

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how may of those reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Sir John Wheeler: There have been no reports of offers of employment from home civil servants in the Northern Ireland Office since February 1993.

The civil service management code does not apply to Northern Ireland civil service staff. The equivalent regulation for Northern Ireland civil servants are contained in the Northern Ireland pay and conditions of service code. Under these regulations, two members of staff from the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office have reported an offer of employme from an outside employer since February 1993 and both were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Stormont (Fire)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what parts of the Stormont buildings were maintained, redecorated or refurbished by his Department, over the past five years; and what was the cost to the Exchequer.

Mr. Moss [holding reply 16 January 1995]: The cost to the Exchequer of maintaining Parliament buildings over the last five years is as follows:

1990–91 £	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £	1994–95 £

The figure for 1994–95 represents expenditure incurred prior to the fire.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Fire Precautions (Places of Work) Regulations 1993 have an equivalent in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss [Holding reply 16 January 1995]: I understand that the Fire Precautions (Places of Work) Regulations will come into effect in Great Britain in early 1995. A consultation paper incorporating proposals for equivalent Northern Ireland Regulations is expected to be issued by the end of February 1995.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what fire regulations are imposed on (a) the Stormont Parliament building and (b) Northern Irish stately homes and heritage buildings which are open to the public.

Mr. Moss [Holding reply 16 January 1995]: The inquiry by Sir Reginal Doyle into the fire at Parliament buildings on 2 January 1995 will consider the fire safety legislation which applies to Parliament buildings.

The majority of stately homes in Northern Ireland which are open to the public are in the care of the National Trust, which co-operates with the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland to ensure that the properties comply with the relevant legislation.

Listed buildings which form part of the Government Estate are subject to the Fire Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1984 as it applies to Crown property. Other listed buildings open to the public are required to have a fire certificate if they belong to a class of building so designated under the 1984 order.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what insurance against fire loss or damage exists in relation to the fabric of the Stormont buildings and the furnishings and artefacts therein.

Mr. Moss [holding reply 16 January 1995]: In line with Government policy that Departments do not normally insure commercially, there is no insurance against fire loss or damage in relation to the fabric and furnishings of Parliament buildings.

Some items of silverware, which were not damaged in the recent fire, were insured commercially.

New Zealand Flatworm

Mr. William Ross: To aks the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies he has carried out into the numbers of areas in Northern Ireland where the New Zealand flatworm has been found; whether it is increasing in numbers and areas affected; and what has been its impact on native earthworms and soil structure.

Mr. Ancram [holding reply 17 January 1995]: The New Zealand flatworm has now been identified at more than 500 sites in Northern Ireland. The majority of these are domestic gardens, but available evidence indicates that it is spreading into agricultural land.

Department of Agriculture scientists are engaged in studies into the impact of the flatworm on earthworms in grasslands in Northern Ireland. These studies have shown that native earthworm numbers are significantly decreased and some earthworm species may be eliminated. Flatworm—induced reductions in earthworm numbers have been linked to adverse changes in soil, bulk density and water-holding capacity, hence soil fertility is likely to be adversely affected.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Shipbuilding

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what comparative assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department as the sponsoring Department for the shipbuilding industry in Tyne and Wear alongside the work of the Scottish Office and Northern Ireland Office.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government's policies on sponsorship of the shipbuilding industry apply equally in England, Scotland and Northern Ireland. The success of individual companies in the United Kingdom depends upon the management and work force of those companies, and the market conditions they encounter.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the future for the shipbuilding industry in Tyne and Wear.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All sectors of the economy are equally important in maintaining and increasing our national prosperity. The Government make no judgments about the relative prospects of individual sectors.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Heseltine: No central records of offers are kept, but 52 staff have made applications to accept offers of outside employment since February 1993.

VAT (Fuel)

Ms Coffey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the effect of value added tax on gas and electricity levels of consumption by (a) low users and (b) high users.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Energy's reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) of 22 March 1993, Official Report, column 484-85 stated that the imposition of VAT on 17.5 per cent. on gas and electricity was expected to reduce domestic sector energy consumption by about 4 per cent. below what it would otherwise have been. This estimate took no account of any offsetting measures. There is no specific estimate available for the effect of 8 per cent. VAT on domestic fuel, but it may be assumed that the effect would be roughly half that given for the 17.5 per cent. rate. No separate estimates of the effects on low and high users are available.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Ian Taylor: During the past year the Department of Trade and Industry filled one post, the chief executive of the Invest in Britain Bureau, using the services of an executive search agency. The total cost, including advertising, was £23,850.

Chief executives of agencies will reply direct, where appropriate, in respect of their own use of executive search agencies.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 20 December 1994:

I have been asked to answer with respect to the Laboratory of the Government Chemist your question to the President of the Board of Trade tabled on 12 December 1994.

The Laboratory of the Government Chemist has not used the services of an executive search agency during the last year.

Letter from John Hobday to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 January 1995:

Further to Mr Taylor's reply to your question of 12 December about the use made by the Department of Trade and Industry of Executive Search Agencies, the position in respect of the Accounts Services Agency is that it has made no use of such Agencies during the last year.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 January 1995:

USE OF EXECUTIVE SEARCH AGENCIES

Further to Mr. Taylor's reply to your Parliamentary Question on this subject, I can add that this Agency has not had any occasion to use the services of an executive search agency during the past year.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 January 1995:

DTI USE OF SEARCH AGENCIES

During the past year the Radiocommunication Agency has not used the services of an executive search agency in order to fill vacancies.

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 January 1995:

I would refer to your Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade concerning the use of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within the Department of Trade and Industry and its Executive Agencies. I would confirm that NEL has not, during the last year, used an executive search agency to fill any vacancy which has arisen at NEL.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 January 1995:

You recently tabled the following Parliamentary Question:

To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

I am replying as Chief Executive and Registrar of Companies House.

During the past year, Companies House have had no occasion to make use of Executive Search Agencies in filling vacancies.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 January 1995:

I am responding on behalf of the Patent Office to your Parliamentary Question about use of executive search agencies in filling vacancies. The Patent Office advises executive search agencies of vacancies where in our experience it is hard to find suitable applicants, such as computer specialists. However, no staff were recruited by this means in the past year and no fees were paid.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 January 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about the use and cost of executive search agencies by The Insolvency Service.

The Insolvency Service has not made any use of executive search agencies during the past year. It has used employment agencies for the recruitment of casual administration grades and for short term appointees with professional qualifications and experience on a non-permanent basis.

Letter from Dr. Peter Clapham to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 January 1995:

You asked the President of the Board of Trade about the use of executive search agencies within DTI and its Executive Agencies.

In the case of the National Physical Laboratory, I can tell that no use of such agencies has been made during the last year.

British Gas

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the case of Rose McKeown and British Gas.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is a matter for British Gas.

Professional Football

Ms Hoey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment he has made of the current accountancy procedures relating to the fees and payments of the transfer of professional footballers;

(2) what assessment he has made of the accountancy procedures of the valuation of the professional footballers as assets of the football clubs.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None. Football clubs that are limited companies must follow the provisions of the Companies Act 1985, accounting standards and generally accepted accounting practice. Complaints about departures from the accounting requirements of the Companies Act by public and large private companies are dealt with by the financial reporting review panel; my Department deals with other such complaints.

Wool Content Labelling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action his Department is taking to ensure that the wool content declarations for imported garments and carpets are correct.

Mr. Ian Taylor: EC Directive 71/307/EEC, as amended, requires textile products which are placed on the market to bear or be accompanied by an accurate indication of their fibre content. The directive is implemented in the United Kingdom by the Textile Products (Indications of Fibre Content) Regulations 1986, as amended by the Textile Products (Indications of Fibre Content) (Amendment) Regulations of 1988 and 1994, which are enforced by local authority trading standards departments. The European Commission pursues complaints about the manner in which member states have implemented and enforced the requirements of the directive. Following representations by my Department, I am informed that the Commission has instituted infraction proceedings against Italy for incorrect implementation of the directive.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next plans to meet chief trading standards officers to discuss imports of wool content garments and carpets.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have no such plans. The Department's actions in this area are set out in my reply of today to the hon. Member.

Export Credits Guarantee Cover (Russia)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the nature of export credits guarantee cover currently available for Russia; how much of that cover has been taken up by British companies; what the criteria for cover are; what sort of commercial ventures this cover is intended to stimulate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: ECGD has made US$800 million of medium to long-term export credit and investment insurance cover available for United Kingdom business in the Russian Federation. Approximately US$180 million of this ECGD cover has been utilised and two further projects, currently in negotiation, are expected to use up about another US$420 million. It has been agreed with the Russian authorities that the ECGD cover should be used to support projects which will earn hard currency earning or save foreign exchange, by means of import substitution or are in certain priority sectors: energy, minerals, food processing or distribution, health care or medical equipment. It is intended that the cover should be used primarily to support self-financing projects which, after completion, should earn much-needed foreign exchange revenues for Russia.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Garnier: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much funding his Department will be providing to TECs in 1995–96 for small and medium businesses.

Mr. Ian Taylor: For 1995–96, my Department is providing TECs with £32.7 million to part fund a range of business—support measures aimed mainly at small and medium-sized businesses. A further £8.8 million is being provided to TECs for the diagnostic and consultancy service delivered by Business Link. My Department is also providing funding totalling £42.9 million for providing a range of advisory services in Business Links and for helping to complete the Business Link network which will mainly assist small and medium-sized businesses.

The total funding for 1995–96 is £84.4 million, as compared to £57.4 million for 1994–95. This substantial increase reflects the high priority which my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade attaches to the speedy development of the Business Link network and to the enhancement of the level and quality of business support services.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the price of electricity has increased or decreased in real terms since privatisation in each of the regional electricity companies.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The percentage changes in real terms in the price of electricity for domestic consumers between 1989 and 1994 in each of the regional electricity companies are shown in the following table.

Regional electricity company	Percentage change between 1989 and 1994 on average household bill (excluding VAT)[1,2] Standard tariff	Economy 7 tariff
East Midlands Electricity	–2.3	–1.4
Eastern Electricity	–4.4	–4.8
London Electricity	–6.8	–3.3
Manweb	–5.4	–3.5
Midlands Electricity	–9.7	–4.7
Northern Electricity	+0.7	–0.7
Norweb	–7.1	–5.9
Seeboard	–6.9	–5.8
South Wales Electricity	+2.0	+1.5
South Western Electricity	–1.0	+0.2
Southern Electricity	–3.1	–1.9
Yorkshire Electricity	–9.3	–5.5

[1] Based on the assumption that the average household consumes 3,300 kWh of electricity per year on the Standard tariff and 6,600 kWh (3,000 day units and 3,600 night units) on the Economy 7 tariff. Standing charges are included as are any lump sum rebates made in 1994. No account has been taken of discounts given by the regional electricity companies for direct debit or similar methods of payment.

[2] Real terms prices are calculated using the GDP (market prices) deflator.

VAT has been excluded from the above figures. This tax, at 8 per cent. was imposed from 1 April 1994, but an unspecified number of consumers paid in advance and will not have paid any VAT during 1994.

The average price of electricity to industrial consumers in the United Kingdom decreased, in real terms, by 12.4 per cent. between 1989 and 1994. Details of prices charged to industry by individual companies are commercially confidential.

Iraq (Arms Sales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the Ministers in his Department who have had responsibilities in respect of the sale of arms to Iraq.

Mr. Heseltine: As President of the Board of Trade, I have responsibility for export licensing, to Iraq or anywhere else. This responsibility has been exercised by Governments prior to this Administration.

Since May 1979, the Presidents of the Board of Trade and Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry have been:

Right hon. Sir John Nott
Right hon. John Biffen MP
Right hon. Lord Cockfield
Right hon. Lord Parkinson
Right hon. Lord Tebbit
Right hon. Sir Leon Brittan
Right hon. Paul Channon MP
Right hon. Lord Young
Right hon. Lord Ridley
Right hon. Peter Lilley MP
Right hon. Michael Heseltine MP

Since May 1979 the Ministers for Trade have been:

Right hon. Lord Parkinson
Right hon. Lord Rees
Right hon. Paul Channon MP

Right hon. Alan Clark
Right hon. Lord Trefgarne
Right hon. Sir Timothy Sainsbury MP
Right hon. Richard Needham MP

The following Ministers have also held certain responsibilities for trade matters:

Right hon. Kenneth Clarke MP
Right hon. Tony Newton MP
Edward Leigh MP
Ian Taylor MP

It is not practical to determine which of these Ministers may have considered export licences for arms to Iraq.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which types of anti-personnel mine are manufactured in Britain and are allowed to be exported.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Anti-personnel mines have not been produced in Britain, or exported, for over a decade. On 27 July 1994, the Government announced an indefinite moratorium on the export of mines that do not self-destruct or self-neutralise. In considering any application for an export licence for self-destructing or self-neutralising anti-personnel mines, my Department, together with our advisers in other Government Departments, would consider very carefully the political and military implications of allowing consignments to go overseas. Adherence by the proposed recipient country to the principles of protocol II of the UN weaponry convention, which places certain prohibitions and restrictions on the use of land mines, would be a significant factor in such considerations.

Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what external financing limit has been set for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for 1995–96.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The UKAEA's external financing limit for 1995–96 will be minus £10.3 million.

Post Office

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the Royal Mail spent on its campaign promoting greater commercial freedom for the Post Office; and how this money was spent.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 17 January 1995]: This is an operational matter for the Post Office.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To aks the President of the Board of Trade how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the public appointments unit.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 17 January 1995]: I am currently responsible for a total of more than 630 public appointments. The public appointment unit provides names of suitably qualified candidates for a wide range of DTI public appointments. In 1994, nine appointments to six separate public bodies were made from names supplied by the PAU.

British Gas

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the consequences of Her Majesty's Government's policy of disaggregating the operations of British Gas on the current routine inspection, servicing and supply of spare parts for domestic gas appliances and any implications for the safety of their operations.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 16 January 1995]: We expect British Gas to continue to provide an emergency service to respond to suspected gas leaks. This will include the free half hour's work to fix the leak, and deal with any related minor repairs to appliances.

The Government are determined that safety standards will be maintained in the proposed extension of competition to the domestic gas market. The Health and Safety Commission has been asked to report on this issue.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Unemployment

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide estimates of the number of 16 and 17–year–olds not currently in full–time education, work or training in Lewisham.

Mr. Paice: Estimates for Lewisham are unavailable, but the labour force survey shows that in summer 1994 there were 17,000 16 and 17–year–olds who were not in full or part–time employment, training or full–time education in the Greater London region. Of these, 10,000 were actively seeking employment or training. The remainder were economically inactive and include, for example, those young people who were looking after the home or who were long–term sick or disabled. The Government guarantee that all 16 and 17–year–olds who are not in full–time education or a job and are seeking training are offered a suitable youth training place.

Disability Symbol

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many organisations have applied to use the disability symbol and been refused;

(2) how many complaints have been received regarding employers using the disability symbol and not implementing the five commitments to action;

(3) how many organisations have used the disability symbol in the past but have had the facility removed for not carrying out the five commitments to action;

(4) how many organisations now use the disability symbol.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. John Heppell, dated 18 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about organisations who use, or have used, the disability symbol.

You asked how many organisations have applied to use the disability symbol and have been refused. While there are occasions when the Employment Service (ES) recommends that an organisation delay in adopting the symbol until they have taken some further action, we do not maintain records of such instances. I am aware of no circumstance where we have refused an employer authority to adopt the symbol.

You also asked how many complaints have been received about symbol users not implementing one of their commitments, and how many had been asked to withdraw from symbol use due to non-fulfilment of their commitments.

We do not keep a central record of complaints, although I am aware of two that have reached my head office direct. Any complaints of this nature are taken very seriously and investigated with the symbol user concerned by a representative from the Placing, Assessment and Counselling Team or the Major Organisations' Development Unit. In cases where the symbol was clearly being abused we would ask the organisation to stop using it, although I am not aware of any instance to date where this has happened.

The last published statistics in July 1994 record 940 employers using the symbol, including a number of organisations operating throughout the country.

I hope this is helpful.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the turnover rates of each TEC board for each year since their creation.

Mr. Paice: I am unable to give the information that the hon. Member is asking for, as it is not collected in that form. However, the total annual turnover for board members for training and enterprise councils in England and Wales is shown in the table:

Date	Annual turnover per cent.
January 92 to December 92	14.9
January 93 to December 93	14.6
January 94 to December 94	25.7

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the surpluses in the accounts of every TEC for every year since their creation (a) as a percentage of that TEC's total expenditure and (b) in money terms.

Mr. Paice: Lists of English training and enterprise councils with the information requested on "in year" operating surpluses, obtained from their annual statutory audited accounts, at the end of the financial years 1990–91, 1991–92 and 1992–93 are shown in the tables.

I am unable to give the figures requested for 1993–94, as this information is not yet in the public domain for every TEC. However, as TEC accounts for 1993–94 become available to the Department, copies are placed in the Library.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the administrative costs for each TEC for every year since their creation.

Mr. Paice: A list of English training and enterprise councils and their "in year" administrative costs, as shown in their annual statutory audited accounts, at the end of the financial years 1990–91, 1991–92 and 1992–93 are shown in the tables.

I am unable to give the figures requested for 1993–94 as this information is not yet in the public domain for every TEC. However, as TEC accounts for 1993–94 become available to the Department, copies are placed in the Library.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the members of each TEC board and their companies for each year since their creation.

Mr. Paice: It is not possible to provide a list of the members of each training and enterprise council board and their companies for each year since their creation as this information is not held centrally.

Since January 1994 a list of current members of each TEC board and their companies is placed in the Library every quarter.

Career Development Loans

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 1098, what was the total cost of the career development loan advertising campaign.

Mr. Paice: The cost of the 1993–94 career development loan advertising campaign was £1,862,491.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table comparing male, female and total full-time and part-time employees (i) in employment, (ii) unemployed for October 1992 and the latest available date in (a) Doncaster, (b) Llanelli, (c) Retford, (d) Chesterfield, (e) Nottingham, (f) Mansfield, (g) Sunderland, (h) Wakefield and Dewsbury, (i) Barnsley, (j) Sheffield, (k) Stafford, (l) Wigan and St.

Mr. Oppenheim: The employment information requested is not available for 1992. The latest reliable employment information for these travel to-work areas is for September 1991, from the periodic census of employment. This information and the unemployment statistics requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database available in the Library.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Miss Widdecombe: I regret that the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Youth Training

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage of those leaving youth training schemes who progressed to (a) full-time work, (b) part-time work, (c) self-employment, (d) further education and training and (e) unemployment, in Southampton, Itchen, Southampton and Hampshire in each of the last five years.

Mr. Paice: Information is not available for individual constituencies and local authorities. Information for Hampshire training and enterprise council is available from 1991–92, the first full year of operation. The information is given in the table.

SCOTLAND

School Inspections

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school inspections were carried out in 1994; and how many in each category he estimates will be carried out in 1995.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Inspections of primary and secondary schools take place for a range of purposes including inspections leading to published reports on individual schools, those which contribute evidence to a published report on an aspect of education and those designed to obtain information on miscellaneous other matters. Approximately 310 inspections were carried out in primary schools in 1994 and 170 in secondary schools. A similar number is projected in each category for 1995.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the lengthiest period, on current plans, that (a) a primary and (b) a secondary school will go without an inspector's visit.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Inspections of primary and secondary schools take place for a range of purposes, including inspections leading to published reports on individual schools, those which contribute evidence to a published report on an aspect of education and those designed to obtain information on miscellaneous other matters. The pattern of inspection visits for these purposes means that, on average, six years may elapse between an inspector's visit to a primary school and two years in the case of secondary schools.

General Practitioners

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the value of chapter 10.5 payments to general practitioners in the highlands and islands for each year since its introduction (a) in total for the highlands and islands and (b) as an average for applicable practices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information about payments made to general medical practitioners in Highland, Orkney, Shetland and Western Isles health boards under the chapter 10.5 payments scheme is set out in the table.

[2] Between 1990 and 1992 amounts paid to GMPs under the transitional payments scheme were deducted from any chapter 10.5 payments due. The transitional payments scheme ceased on 31 March 1992 and thereafter chapter 10.5 payments were made in full.

Students (Sickness)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students at each further education college have had their grants withdrawn because of sickness absence of more than 28 days in the latest year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Students at further education colleges in Scotland may be eligible for support from either the Student Awards Agency for Scotland or their education authority, depending on the nature of their course.

No student in receipt of support from the awards agency would have his or her grant withdrawn solely on the grounds of a sickness absence of more than 28 days. There is provision for the level of grant to be adjusted, exceptionally, after the student returns to study where there has been a significantly lower maintenance requirement during the period of absence.

Where a student withdraws from his or her course—permanently or temporarily—following a prolonged period of sickness the maintenance grant will be terminated with effect from the date of withdrawal. Details of the reasons for individual withdrawals are not held centrally.

The terms and conditions on which education authorities in Scotland offer assistance to students are entirely at the discretion of the authority concerned.

Further Education Expenditure

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage increase or decrease in real terms, allowing for inflation, for spending on (a) universities and (b) further and adult education from 1982–83 to 1992–93.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Between 1982–83 and 1992–93 the then eight Scottish universities were funded by the University Grants Committee and, latterly, the Universities Funding Council. During that period total recurrent public expenditure on the eight universities, in the form of UGC and UFC grants for teaching and research and tuition fees in respect of those students on full-time courses who were charged fees at the home rate, increased by 3.5 per cent. in real terms.

The increase in current expenditure on further education in real terms by local authorities over the same period was 4.2 per cent. This includes expenditure on adult education.

Private Housing Developers

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the levels of Scottish Homes' grants to private housing developers in each year since Scottish Homes was established.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is in the table.

Scottish homes' grants to private housing developers

	£ million outturn
1989–90	0.84
1990–91	9.24
1991–92	14.93
1992–93	25.09
1993–94	28.30

Innumeracy and Illiteracy

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are currently being taken to assist schools to overcome innumeracy and illiteracy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Improving pupils' standards of attainment in English language and mathematics is central to the Government's five to 14 programme. The programme sets out attainment targets, which allow such pupils' performance and progress to be assessed and assisted. National tests also provide an important source of evidence of achievement in key skills and processes in reading, writing, and mathematics. Diagnostic materials have been prepared to help teachers tackle pupils with particular difficulties in English and mathematics.

Social Work Inspectorate

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time equivalent staff are involved in the social work inspectorate; what is (a) its annual revenue budget and (b) its budget for training and staff development; how much has been spent in the past year on away days for staff to hotels; and what were the purposes of such activities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are 18 full-time equivalent professional members of staff in the inspectorate and 17.5 administrative staff. The inspectorate's budget for 1994–95 is £1,134,618, of which £3,525 was allocated to job-related training. Ten members of staff attended a strategy day along with their colleagues in the social work services group. The purpose of the day was to review the issues involved in local government reorganisation and to consider key objectives over the next two years. The cost of the one-day event was £1,240.

Lochranza Castle

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much in public funds has been spent on the renovation and upkeep of Lochranza castle in each of the past 20 years; and what further expenditure is proposed.

Sir Hector Monro: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Historic Scotland under its chief executive, Mr. Graeme Munro. I have asked Mr. Munro to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Graeme Munro to Mr Brian Wilson, dated 18 January 1995:

1. Sir Hector Monro has asked me to reply to your Question 272 of 11 January about the cost of renovation and upkeep of Lochranza Castle on Arran.

2. Lochranza Castle has been in the Secretary of State's guardianship since 1956. Under Section 13 of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979, guardianship gives the Secretary of State a duty to maintain the Castle and full control and management of it. The maintenance and management are carried out by Historic Scotland on behalf of the Secretary of State. The Castle is open to the public free of charge.

3. The information which you sought about costs over the past 20 years and our future expenditure plans is:

3.1 Between 1975 and 1985 we carried out routine maintenance at a cost of approximately £2,000 per annum;

3.2 Between 1986 and 1990, we spent £79,000 consolidating the main entrance tower and repairing a collapsed sea wall, as well as carrying out routine maintenance;

3.3 Between 1991 and 1994, we carried out routine maintenance at a cost of about £1,000 per annum;

3.4 Over the next five years, we plan to undertake another phase of consolidation work which we expect will cost about £15,000 to £20,000 per year.

I am sorry that precise annual figures are not immediately available but I hope that this letter provides the information which you need. Please let me know if I can help further.

Transplant Operations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many heart transplants were carried out in Scotland in the calendar year 1994;

(2) how many patients were referred outside Scotland for consideration of heart, lung or heart-lung transplant in the calendar years 1993 and 1994;

(3) how many patients were operated on outside Scotland for heart, lung or heart-lung transplant in the calendar years 1993 and 1994.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: During the period January–October 1994, 14 heart transplant operations were carried out in Scotland. The figure is provisional and data for November and December are not yet available.

Information about the number of patients either referred or operated on outside Scotland for heart, lung or heart-lung transplant is not held centrally in Scotland. The hospital to which a patient is referred is a matter for individual clinicians.

Forestry

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what timetable he envisages for the implementation of his future policy towards forestry.

Sir Hector Monro: We are currently considering the responses to "Our Forests—The Way Ahead", which set out our conclusions following the forestry review, and will make an announcement in due course.

Civil Servant Travel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which airlines have been granted preferred carrier status for civil servant travel to overseas destinations.

Mr. Lang: The preferred carrier for any particular civil servant's travel will depend on the circumstances of the journey concerned and value for money. For regular requirements, my Department has entered into arrangements with Sabena for travel to Brussels and Air France for Paris.

Right to Buy

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total value of discounts to public sector tenants in Scotland exercising their right to buy in each year since 1980–81, both in cash terms and expressed in 1994–95 prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table for each full year for which data are available.

Scottish Enterprise Loans

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what were the locations of the head offices of the firms which benefited from Scottish Enterprise loans and grants in 1993–94;

(2) which companies have benefited from Scottish Enterprise loans and grants in 1993–94; and what were the amounts.

Mr. Stewart: These are operational matters for Scottish Enterprise. I have asked its chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Agricultural Arbitrators

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of Scottish agricultural arbitrators, indicating in each case the individual's stated profession.

Sir Hector Monro: Arbitrations conducted by arbiters appointed by the parties themselves are not notified to my Department. Arbiters appointed by the Secretary of State, following an application by either party, are selected from a panel whose membership was last reviewed in October 1993. I am arranging for copies of the full list of current panel members, with each member's stated profession, to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the guidelines issued to agricultural arbitrators in respect of (a) their basis of selection of comparable farms and (b) the number of comparable farms to be selected for the purposes of an arbitration; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Provisions for arbitration on the level of rent, including reference to comparable subjects, are contained in section 13 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 1991. The Act does not, however, specify how the comparables should be selected nor the number. Given the great variation in size and circumstances of farms, comparables are selected by the arbiter in the context of each particular case.

My Department does not issue guidance to arbiters beyond that contained in the relevant legislation. However, training by the Scottish Association of Agricultural Arbiters and the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors in Scotland is available to all arbiters.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has carried out of the costs to tenant farmers associated with agricultural arbitration cases; what fresh proposals he has to bring forward to the makings of the scheme as laid down under the 1991 Act with particular reference to the introduction of a right of appeal to his choice of arbitrator in any given case; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The rate of remuneration for arbiters appointed by the Secretary of State is set by him in accordance with Section 63 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 1991. It is a matter for the parties themselves to decide how they wish to be represented at the arbitration and the arrangements for awarding expenses set out in schedule 7 to the 1991 Act provide for the arbiter to disallow expenses incurred by the parties unnecessarily.

There are no proposals to introduce changes to the provisions of the 1991 Act to provide parties with a right of appeal against the choice of arbiter by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farm arbitrations were held in Scotland in the last five years, indicating the number of arbitrations carried out by each arbitrator; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Members of the Secretary of State's panel of agricultural arbiters were appointed to conduct 255 arbitrations in the years 1990–1994. The information on the number of occasions on which each member of the panel was appointed is set out in the table. A number of these cases were, however, settled by agreement without proceeding to an arbitration hearing.

Set-aside Payments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of farmers in Scotland who have not yet received payments under the 1994 arable aid scheme for land set aside from oilseed production for non-food use; how much money in total is currently being withheld; what is the reason for the delay in making such payments; and when he expects the money to be released.

Sir Hector Monro: Seventy-nine payments involving a non-food crop element under the 1994 arable area payments scheme, amounting to a total of just over £2.3 million, are being withheld. My Department has no authority under the relevant EC legislation to make these payments until the collectors-first processors concerned have sent the Intervention Board the necessary documentation covering proof of delivery and the board has given formal clearance for payment to proceed.

My Department will make these outstanding payments as soon as the Intervention Board can give the necessary clearance.

Electro-shock Weapons

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department has in respect of (a) past and (b) present production of electro-shock weapons at ICL Technical Plastics in Glasgow; what approval his Department has given for such production; and what support he has given (i) directly and (ii) indirectly for the export of such goods.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Office does not have, and never has had, any information about the production of electro-shock weapons at ICL Plastics Ltd. nor has the Department ever given, or been asked to give, approval for such production.

Scottish Trade International, the export arm of the Scottish Office and Scottish Enterprise, had some discussions in 1993 with the company about the marketing of a range of conventional riot gear which had been already sold to police forces within the United Kingdom. No mention of electro-shock weapons or similar products has ever been made to officials. The company has not had any direct or indirect financial support from STI.

Sheriff Courts

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the number of cases disposed of and (b) the number of custodial sentences imposed, by each sheriff court in Scotland, for each of the past five years.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of independent schools operating in Scotland for each financial year since 1975.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year	Number of registered independent schools
1975–76	102
1976–77	99

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department has made of the average household income of the pupils applying for assistance under the assisted places scheme; and what is the average household income of pupils covered by the assisted places scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 January 1995]: Comprehensive information on the household incomes of pupils applying for assistance under the assisted places scheme is not collected centrally. No details, for example, are held on the incomes of households below the threshold at which full fee remission applies nor of those applicants who may be successful in obtaining an assisted place. Applications to join the scheme are made direct to participating schools which must administer the scheme in accordance with the statutory regulations.

Information which is available centrally shows that, in the 1993–94 school session, over 81 per cent. of the families of pupils receiving assistance had household incomes of less than £18,000 per annum, and just over 45 per cent. had household incomes below the £9,522 threshold for full fee remission.

Plastic Surgery, Ayrshire and Arran

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of plastic surgery on patients from Ayrshire and Arran is carried out within hospitals in the Ayrshire and Arran health board area; what action is being taken to increase the percentage treated in local hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 January 1995]: The percentage of plastic surgery in patient discharges of Ayrshire and Arran residents from hospitals within the local health board area rose from 56.8 per cent. in 1991 to 65.3 per cent in 1993, the latest full year for which figures are available.

The Ayrshire and Arran health board's draft acute services strategy states the boards' commitment to purchase more plastic surgery services locally. A new consultant plastic surgeon post to be made at Canniesburn hospital in Glasgow will further impact on local Ayrshire and Arran services as the post will cover patient consultations in Ayrshire.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of judges whose age exceeded (a) 65 years, (b) 70 years and (c) 75 years on 31 December 1994.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information about judges aged 65 and over as at 31 December 1994 is set out in the table:

	Total number	Age 65–69	Age 70–74	Age 75 and over
Lord Chancellor	1	1	[1]—	[1]—
Lords of appeal in ordinary	10	4	1	—
Heads of division	4	[1]—	1	—
Lords justices of appeal	29	7	2	—
High Court judges	95	11	2	—
Circuit judges	512	82	16	—
District judges[1]	322	17	3	—
Stipendiary magistrates	85	11	—	—
Masters[2]	30	8	—	—

[1] including district judges of the principal registry of the family division.
[2] including bankruptcy registrars.

Mr. Ernest Saunders

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord chancellor's Department if Mr. Ernest Saunders is receiving legal aid in his appeal in the Guiness case.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mr. Saunders has not applied for legal aid for his appeal. If he does so, the application will be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of the legal aid regulations.

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between the Ministers and agencies in the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is currently responsible for three executive agencies—the Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office—and is accountable to Parliament for them. The relationship and division of responsibilities between him and his agencies is fully set out in the individual agencies' published framework documents. The Lord Chancellor is responsible for appointing the agency chief executives; for setting and reviewing agency targets and monitoring performance against them; for approving the corporate and business plans; for securing the provision of financial resources; for making rules and orders; and for decisions on policy issues. The Land Registry and the Public Record Office are separate departments. The Public Trust Office is part of the Lord Chancellor's Department. The agency chief executives are responsible for the day-to-day management of the agencies and are accountable to the Lord Chancellor for their effective and efficient management. As accounting officers, or in the case of the Public Trust Office agency accounting officer, the chief executives are also responsible for the proper and economical expenditure of money.

Pension Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to inform individuals awaiting pension appeal tribunal dates of the likely length of waiting time for each centre at the time of application.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are no plans at present to introduce such a scheme, which would be of limited value. In practice, the vast majority of appellants choose to have their hearing at the centre closest to where they live, even when they are aware that waiting times might be shorter elsewhere. The minority who are prepared to travel can obtain information about waiting times at other centres on request.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans his Department has to require the Independent Television Commission to produce detailed, public, measurable assessments of how the ITV companies are meeting their franchise obligations.

Mr. Dorrell: The Independent Television Commission is required to publish in its annual report where Channel 3 licensed have failed to comply with licence conditions relating to certain statutory requirements.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the progress made on the provision of subtitling and signing on television programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Subtitling is provided on Channel 3 and Channel 4 as well as on BBC television services. The Independent Television Commission is responsible for monitoring the requirements on subtitling in the Channel 3 and Channel 4 licences. The commission published its assessment in its first annual performance review in May 1994.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half-year ended 31 December 1994 of individual works of art and museum objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historic or artistic interests which have been accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax, together with information, where applicable, as to conditions or wishes expressed by testators or executors in the matter of allocation; and if he will list the works of art and museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, with the dates of their acceptance in satisfaction of inheritance tax.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows:

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the public appointments unit.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 17 January 1995]: My Department has appointed 10 individuals to public positions in the last year who were first identified by the public appointments unit.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Executive Agencies

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what evaluation he has made of value for money in the next steps agencies.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: As described in the White Paper, "The Civil Service, Continuity and Change" Cm 2627, each next steps agency is reviewed at five-yearly intervals. The process includes an evaluation of the agency's performance by the responsible Minister which also covers value for money issues.

The record of agencies in improving effectiveness and efficiency in government is summarised in the Next Steps Review 1994, Cm 2750. It shows that, in total, agencies met 80 per cent. of their targets in 1993–94. This represents a trend of improvement over last year's figure of 77 per cent. and the previous year's 76 per cent.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Attorney-General what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between his departmental ministers and agencies.

The Attorney-General: The division of responsibilities and relationship between myself, the Treasury Solicitor and the Government Property Lawyers agency are defined in the published framework document a copy of which is in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General when he intends to reply to a letter dated 19 December from Lindis Percy of Bradford, which she copied to the hon. Member for Bradford West; if he will place a copy of the letter from Ms Percy and his reply in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: An official from my Chambers replied to Ms Percy on 16 January 1995. I have placed a copy of Ms Percy's letter and my official's response in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Disabled People

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 910, if he will list his Department's responsibilities for providing opportunities for disabled people, beyond those responsibilities which it has for its own staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Although the policy responsibility for providing opportunities for disabled people lies with other Departments, DTI is involved in a number of areas which help provide opportunities for disabled people. For example, the Department, together with the Department of Health, helps to ensure that United Kingdom companies are well placed to take advantage of the funding provided, by the European Commission, for the development of new technologies which will benefit disabled people. We are also currently engaged, together with the Foreign Office, the Department of Health and the Department of Transport, in producing promotional video which will showcase UK products for disabled people.

Together with other departments, DTI is represented on the Inter-Departmental Group on Disability which coordinates activities in this area across Government, and through which we can keep a watching brief on initiatives which might be of interest to those in this department.

The department of Trade and Industry is an equal opportunity employer and currently employs 379 staff with disabilities—there are around 10,500 staff in DTI and its executive agencies—of whom around 10 per cent. are at grade 7 (principal) level or above.

Nuclear Power Stations (Defects)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cracks have been discovered in nuclear power stations; how many of them arise as a result of the use of Inconel 600; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As a result of routine inspection programmes to support the operational safety cases, cracks have been identified in some of the steam header welds at the Dungeness B and Heysham 1 nuclear power stations. The precise number of these cracks is difficult to establish. Both stations remain closed while the operator, Nuclear Electric, undertakes appropriate remedial work and prepares safety cases for the return of the plants to operation. The two stations will only be brought back into operation once the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate is satisfied that it is safe for them to do so.

Inconel 600 is not used in the welds where the cracks have occurred.

Timeshare

Mr. Hunter : To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take measures to reduce or simplify the notices of cancellation which are demanded under the Timeshare Act 1992.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I intend to review these notices in the context of consultation on the measures required for implementation of the EC timeshare directive.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by pit the coal stocks included in the sale documents for British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: Detailed information about the volume of coal stocks held by the regional coal companies is commercially confidential. British Coal's total stocks of some 11 million tonnes of coal were included in the sale of the regional coal companies, with the majority going to RJB.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations underlay his decision to allow RJB Mining to pay £100 million below its tender price for British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: As outlined in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 2 December 1994, Official Report, columns 939–40, adjustments to the price bid by RJB Mining, in common with the bids of other preferred bidders, reflect developments since tenders were submitted in September 1994 or information which was not available to bidders at the time. the bulk of these adjustments relate to specific changes in expected levels of coal stock and liabilities disclosed after bids were submitted. Even after the adjustments, the price paid by RJB is substantially higher than other tenders.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the land and property in Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley constituency which was included in the sale of British Coal assets to Mining (Scotland) Ltd.

Mr. Eggar: In the time available, I am unable to confirm which of the assets transferred from British Coal to the Scottish Coal Company Ltd. fall within the hon. Member's constituency. The sites within Strathclyde region which have transferred are:

	Location
Opencast disposal points
Dalquhandy	6 km south of Lesmahagow

Waste Incineration (Electricity Generation)

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current contribution to electricity generation made by domestic waste incineration; and what estimate he has made for the future contribution to electricity generation from this source.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Electricity generating capacity fuelled by municipal or industrial waste amounts to about 106 MW from seven power stations in the United Kingdom. The third non-fossil fuel obligation order for renewables, which I made on 20 December 1994, required the regional electricity companies to contract for a further 241.87 MW of generating capacity from 20 projects. Energy from waste projects would recover value from about four million tonnes of waste per year and provide access to over 200,000 tonnes per year of ferrous material for recycling if all NFFO 3 projects were to go forward. Two of the existing projects have secured a beneficial use for the reject heat through combined heat and power operation, and developers of six of the NFFO 3 projects have declared their intention to do likewise.

Nuclear Power Industry (Subsidy)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total Government subsidy to the nuclear power industry in the United Kingdom for each year from 1979 to 1994; and what is planned for each year up to 1998, expressed in 1993 prices.

Mr. Eggar: No Government subsidies have been paid to Nuclear Electric plc or British Nuclear Fuels plc and none is at present planned. There is no record of the Central Electricity Generating Board having received nuclear specific subsidies from Government covering the period from 1979 when they were responsible for nuclear power generation. Both NE and BNFL are recipients of the fossil fuel levy paid by electricity suppliers in England and Wales. The Government have, however, been the customer for research and development and other programmes undertaken by the Atomic Energy Authority. It funds those programmes and the consequences of those programmes.

Ministerial responsibility for Scottish Nuclear Limited rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Nuclear Review

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he intends to place in the Library copies of the reports commissioned from consultants in connection with the nuclear review when they are completed.

Mr. Eggar: As was made clear in announcing the terms of reference for the review, the reports themselves will not be placed in the Library of the House. However, the announcement of the conclusions of the review will be supported by the facts and analysis of the facts relevant to our decisions.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the costs of consultants commissioned in connection with the nuclear review.

Mr. Eggar: This information is commercially confidential.

Child Labour

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will study the report sent to him by the hon. Member for Thurrock detailing the exploitation of child factory workers by the Medonna Company of Tirapur in Tamil Nadu whose products are imported into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement as to what powers he has to (a) prevent this exploitation and (b) prevent such imports.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received no such report.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what powers he has to prevent the importation of garments from third-world countries which have been produced wholly or in part by workers being paid low wages or by child labour; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will raise with European Union Ministers the need to halt imports of products into the European Union that have been produced by the extensive use of child labour in third-world countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government work consistently to promote ratification and observance of international agreements to curb the use of child labour. However, the practice primarily reflects poverty. It is more likely to be ended by maintaining open international trade so as to strengthen the economies of the countries concerned rather than by imposing import bans which would anyway face severe legal and practical difficulties. As to wage levels, these vary around the world and give poorer countries a competitive advantage in international markets. It is hard to see how they would be helped by import bans which would deny them this benefit.

Mercury Communications (Promotional Offer)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what complaints his office has received about unfair trading practices from the competitors of Mercury Communications about its One-2-One promotional offer to new subscribers of free telephone calls on Christmas day; if he will refer this to the Office of Fair Trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have received no complaints from competitors of Mercury One-2-One about its Christmas day offer. Representations regarding unfair trading practices would be a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in which member states of the EC the prices of electricity used by the engineering steel industry are lower than that paid in the United Kingdom; and what is his estimate of the difference between the price paid by this industry in the United Kingdom and the average in other EC states.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 18 January 1995]: Information on the price of electricity used by individual industries such as engineering steel are not collected centrally by the Department of Trade and Industry, nor by the Statistical Office of the European Communities. The latest data published by the EC, which refer to prices at 1 July 1994, shows that for the majority of industrial customers, United Kingdom prices are amongst the lowest in Europe.

Prices data are taken from the latest Eurostat publication, "Rapid Reports—Energy and Industry 1994/33". Copies of these reports are held in the Library of the House. Data refer to 1 July 1994 and cover electricity prices for a number of levels of consumption. Generally United Kingdom electricity prices including all taxes and duties except VAT are among the lowest in Europe. For example:

for consumers of 30,000 kWh a year, nine of the other 11 member states had higher prices than the UK;

for consumers of 2 GWh a year, eight of the other 11 member states had higher prices than the UK; and for consumers of 50 GWh a year, nine of the other 11 member states had higher prices than the UK.

Arms Exhibitions

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the overseas arms exhibitions with which Her Majesty's Government have assisted in the past year.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply. In the past year the Ministry of Defence and the Department of Trade and Industry have participated in the following overseas defence exhibitions in support of the UK defence industry's sales and marketing activities:

Asian Aerospace 94, Singapore—February 1994

Association of United States Army, Florida—February and October 1994

Defence Services Asia, Kuala Lumpur—April 1994

Indepo, Dubai—May 1994

Eurosatory 94, Paris—June 1994

1st International Remote Sensing Conference (Open Skies), Strasbourg—September 1994

Defendory, Athens—October 1994

Euronaval, Paris—October 1994

European Funds (Payments)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total amount of money from (a) the European regional development fund and (b) the European social fund which has been paid in each financial year between 1988–89 and 1993–94 to all local authorities within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 18 January 1995]: Following is the information:

	1988–89	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
ERDF	278	319	329	507	768	679
ESF	34	93	111	134	154	188
Total	312	412	440	641	922	867

TREASURY

Central Statistical Office

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards the further development of the CSO.

Mr. Nelson: The Central Statistical Office publishes annually its future work plans in its "Programme Strategies". The most recent relates to the period 1994–95 to 1996–97. These plans are rolled forward each year and are revised in line with changes in expenditure provision and business needs.

I announced in a written answer to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks), 18 November 1994, Official Report, column 12, that a review of the basis on which the Central Statistical Office has been operating as an agency would be conducted. This review is now underway and, if it recommends that the Central Statistical Office should continue as an agency, then a framework document will be drawn up.

I refer also to the answer that the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to the hon. Member for Southport earlier today in which he announced that he has commissioned work to assess the benefits that would arise from merging the Central Statistical Office with the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. The results of this assessment would be taken into account in any new framework document.

Income Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the real increase in expenditure on central Government annual debt interest between 1991–92 and 1996–97; and to what this amount would equate approximately in terms of additional pence on the basic rate of income tax.

Mr. Aitken: Central Government debt interest payments are projected to increase from £16.2 billion in 1991–92 to £26.0 billion in 1996–97, in cash terms. In 1993–94 prices this represents an increase of £6.7 billion.

At 1996–97 income levels the yield in a full year from an increase of one penny in the basic rate of income tax is expected to be about £2 billion.

Government Statistics

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take to improve the co-ordination and dissemination of Government statistics.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and I have agreed that the London-based staff of the Central Statistical Office and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys should be located together at Drummond Gate, Pimlico, subject to the satisfactory completion of negotiations on the lease of the buildings in question. We expect them to move there during the latter part of 1995.

The purpose of these moves, which involve the two main statistics collecting arms of the Government Statistical Service, is to improve the efficiency and quality of Government statistics. Because of the concentration and range of skills at the new location, it will become easier to make further progress in bringing together the massive amount of statistical data currently existing in government, relating them in a meaningful way, and making them more readily available both within government and to the community generally in accordance with the thrust of open government. The co-ordination of government statistics will be improved as it will be easier to develop common standards, classifications and definitions, for use not only by CSO and OPCS but by the rest of the GSS.

CSO and OPCS will remain separate organisations accountable to myself and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health respectively. However, as well as collaborating closely on statistical issues, they will increase efficiency by sharing services wherever possible.

My right hon. Friend and I have commissioned further work to establish what additional benefits would arise from merging the two organisations, and to assess whether these, coupled with other GSS developments, would justify a merger. The intention is that, if a merger were agreed, it should take effect from 1 April 1996.

The arrangements for any merger would fully protect the interests of both organisations' customers, and of those who supply information to them.

OPCS's public search room will remain in St Catherine's house. It will need to move to alternative accommodation in central London before the current lease on St Catherine's house expires in 1999.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions in the last year were first identified by the public appointments unit.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 17 January 1995]: Twelve.

Manufacturing Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the rate of growth of exports of United Kingdom finished manufactures to (a) the EEC and (b) the rest of the world for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: Information about exports of UK manufactures from which rates of growth may be derived can be found on the CSO database, which may be accessed through the Library of the House. Volume information is available only from 1988, but information at current prices is available from 1972.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

East Tibet

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the European Union development project in east Tibet in respect of its impact on (a) Tibetan culture, (b) groundwater pollution and (c) birth deformities; if he will object to the continuation of aid for this project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has had a number of representations about the Pa Nam integrated rural development project in Tibet. Before these representations were received, officials had asked the European Commission to strengthen the conditions for EU funding, to ensure it benefited local Tibetans and incorporated an environmental impact assessment.

The project includes an irrigation scheme, funded by the Chinese Government, on which work has already begun. Suspending EU support would not stop the scheme, but would delay implementation of social components designed to ameliorate its impact on local Tibetans.

Official Travel

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what categories of spouses and children of Overseas Development Administration officials travel (a) economy, (b) business or club class and (c) first class when their air travel is paid for by the ODA.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 20 December 1994]: When a spouse and dependant children accompany an officer at public expense, air travel for leave purposes is normally economy class, holiday visit passages for children who remain at school in the United Kingdom are normally APEX class, and travel at the start and end of tours is normally business class.

African Development Bank

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what annual contribution was made, in each year since 1990, by Her Majesty's Government to the funds of the African development bank; how much any of these funds have been used to finance the RTZ mining project in Madagascar; what assessment he has made of the compatibility of this project with the development policies of Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 17 January 1995]: Annual United Kingdom payments to the African Development bank and fund since 1990–91 were as follows:

	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
AfDB	1,507	1,426	1,490	1,771
AfDF	10,758	11,617	15,382	18,055

We have been assured that the African development bank group has no involvement whatever in the Madagascar project referred to.

Mine-clearing Operations

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase co-operation with the UN for the immediate expansion of mine-clearing operations.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 18 January 1995]: Most of the £7.1 million we have allocated to mine clearance work over the last three years has been in support of United Nations or UN co-ordinated programmes. We therefore stand ready to provide appropriate support to the new mines action unit of the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs in its mission to accelerate the process of land mine clearance.

Eritrea Refugees

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made by the UN in repatriating Eritrean refugees in Sudan; and what impact the recent breakdown of diplomatic relations between Eritrea and Sudan has had upon this.

Mr. Baldry: Since November 1994, the UNHCR has repatriated about 8,700 Eritrean refugees from Sudan. About 16,000 remain to be returned as part of the first phase of the repatriation programme. The recent break in diplomatic relations has not had a major impact on the programme, although it has led to increased security measures in the border area.

TRANSPORT

Public Transport Fares (London)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the annual percentage change and (b) the increase in child fares on London Transport in each year since 1985–86, taking 1984–85 as the base and showing the increase in both actual and real terms.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the table, for child ordinary fares only. The information is not available for child season tickets, travel cards and passes.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the annual percentage change and (b) the increase in fares on (i) London's buses, (ii) London Underground, (iii) all London Transport, (iv) Network South East and (v) British Rail in each year since 1984–85, taking 1984–85 as the base and showing the increase in both actual and real terms; and what was the annual rate of inflation for each of those years.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the tables:

Real fare indices (1984–85=100)

Road Works (Footway Provision)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his Department's policy and how it is conveyed in contracts regarding action to be taken in the absence of compliance with contract requirements regarding maintaining a safe, clear and well directed footway system through or around all road works; and how this is different from the requirements of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991;

(2) what is his policy, and how it is conveyed in contracts, in requiring a safe, clear and well directed footway system to be maintained through or around all road works.

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Laurie Haynes to Mr Andrew Rowe, dated 19 January 1995:

You have asked two questions of the Secretary of State for Transport about his Department's policy and how it is conveyed in contracts. The first concerns the contractual requirements for a safe clear and well directed footway system to be maintained through or around all road works and the second asks what action would be taken if these are not complied with and how they differ from those the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991. As these are operational matters for the Highways Agency, I have been asked to reply.

The Specification for Highways Works sets out the detailed requirements to be included in a contract for the provision of pedestrian facilities during construction. These are contained within Clauses 117: Traffic Safety and Management and Clause 118: Temporary Diversions for Traffic. Additionally detailed provisions for a particular contract are given in numbered appendices 1/17, 1/18 and on the scheme drawings.

Under the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, the Secretary of State has issued the Code of Practice, Safety at Street Works and Roadwork which sets out the requirements regarding the policy for maintaining a safe, clear and well directed footway system through roadworks. This Code clearly sets out the necessary action that a contractor has to take to ensure that the footway is defined. While this Code applies to undertakers' works carried out by or on behalf of the highway authority, the Department recommends that all those concerned with such works follow its advice.

There is no significant difference between the requirements laid down by the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 and those required of the contractor as he is obliged to comply with the contract requirements and all relevant statutes. His activities are monitored by the Engineer, appointed by the Agency to administer the contract, and his Resident Engineer. They have wide powers to draw the contractor's attention to any failure to comply with requirements and to issue instructions and directions to put matters right.

I hope this information is helpful.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total Government expenditure on the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency for each year since 1979 in 1993 prices.

Mr. Norris: Gross voted expenditure by DVLA—formerly DVLD—revalued to 1993–94 prices was:

	£ millions
1979–80	122
1980–81	139
1981–82	140
1982–83	135
1983–84	169
1984–85	163
1985–86	165
1986–87	170
1987–88	179
1988–89	173
1989–90	179
1990–91	188
1991–92	187
1992–93	188
1993–94	188

During this period DVLA's range of responsibilities increased significantly.

Private Finance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reductions there have been in his departmental budget, for any element of his departmental budget, or each of the years (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96, (c) 1996–97, (d) 1997–98 or (e) 1998–99 as a consequence of assumptions about attracting private finance through (i) the private finance initiative and (ii) elsewhere; and what is the monetary detail underlying any such adjustments.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department's budget is not subject to any specific adjustment to reflect private sector funding.

Inland Waterways

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is being taken to ensure that the use of commercial waterways for freight purposes is not prejudiced by recreational activity; and what steps are being taken to maintain high standards of safety on such waterways.

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency is responsible for the oversight of safety of navigation on inland waters for recreational purposes, through the district marine safety committee. British Waterways, which continues to promote both commercial and recreational use of the canal network, works closely with the district marine safety committees to ensure that safety is given the highest priority.

Concessionary Travel

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 17 January Official Report, column 416, what assessment he has made of the scheme agreed between the London boroughs and London Transport for the provision of travel concessions for elderly and disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: None.

Vehicle Excise Duty Exemptions

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will define electrically propelled vehicles, road construction vehicles, road rollers, snow clearing vehicles, gritting vehicles, street lighting vehicles and vehicles used for short journeys between different parts of a person's land within the meaning of his proposals to receive vehicle excise duty exemption; and if he will estimate the expected revenue from each of these categories in each of the first five years of implementation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

The changes to the system of exemptions and concessions to VED contained in my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor's Budget aim to bring the archaic system of exemptions and concessions up to date, to target special treatment where it is most merited, to simplify the complex current system, and to close opportunities for tax evasion. In line with these principles, the Finance Bill contains provisions such that:

(a) electrically propelled vehicles, snow clearing vehicles and gritting vehicles will be licensed in the special concessionary class, paying VED of £35 next year;

(b) road rollers will be licensed in the special vehicles class, paying £135 or £150 depending on weight; and

(c) road construction vehicles and vehicles currently claiming exemption because they do less than six road miles a week will license in the general tax class appropriate for the particular type of vehicle. Most vehicles doing less than six road miles a week will, in fact, move into the special concessionary class and pay £35.

It is not possible to make precise estimates of the revenue which will be raised each year for all these classes. Estimates to the nearest £0.5 million are as follows:

	£ million
Electric vehicles	1.0
Road construction	1.5
Road rollers	3.5
Snow ploughs	negligible
Ice gritters	negligible
Street lighting	0.5
Short journeys	4.0

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Angola

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to, or received from, the UNITA movement in Angola.

Mr. Baldry: Our missions in Lusaka and Luanda are in regular touch with representatives of UNITA. The UNITA representative in London was received at official level at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 17 January. We have taken every opportunity to urge UNITA to implement speedily the Lusaka protocol.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Angola, urging that the protocol recently signed in Lusaka is immediately and fully implemented.

Mr. Baldry: We have taken every suitable opportunity to urge the Angolan Government to implement fully the Lusaka protocol, and will continue to do so.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to, or received from, the Government of Angola in respect of the peace process.

Mr. Baldry: My noble Friend Lord Inglewood met President Dos Santos in Lusaka on 20 November in the margins of the signing ceremony of the Lusaka protocol. We subscribed to a demarche by the European Union to the Government of Angola on 10 November and to a message from the President of the Security Council to President Dos Santos on 18 November. Most recently the United Kingdom Permanent Representative to the United Nations met the Angolan Foreign Minister on 7 December.

Rapid Reaction Force

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the desirability of establishing a rapid reaction force under the control of the United Nations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have noted the UN Secretary-General's proposals in his Supplement to an Agenda for Peace, and believe that they will need to be studies closely, taking account of all the financial and operational implications.

We believe that the key to a faster response by the UN lies in reducing the delay in member states deploying troops, especially through tackling logistic shortcomings.

UN Peacekeeping Forces

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to improve the response times in the establishment and deployment of UN peacekeeping forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We support the United Nations Secretary-General's standby force planning initiative, and have provided details of British resources which could be made available to the UN on a case by case basis. We believe it is important that member states should maintain a dialogue with the UN's standby force planning team, and a British delegation will be visiting New York in the next few weeks to take this forward.

In addition, we believe that some member states could deploy more swiftly on peacekeeping operations if they had the requisite logistic support, and support the Secretary-General's proposals in his Supplement to an Agenda for Peace for close co-operation between member states in this area.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for improving the logistical support of UN peacekeeping forces in their initial stages.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made a series of proposals to the United Nations with a view to improving the logistic support for peacekeeping operations. In particular, it is essential that the operational and administrative staffs at the UN Secretariat coordinate fully, that requirements for the provision of logistic support are factored in to the planning at an early stage, and that arrangements for letting contracts are taken forward as soon as a decision has been taken by the Security Council to launch or expand a mission. In addition, it is essential that there should be an appropriate combination of military and commercial logistic back-up, and that decisions on expenditure should be delegated to field level whenever possible.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what lessons he has learnt from the establishing of UN peacekeeping operations in Somalia, Bosnia and Rwanda; and what steps he is taking to remedy any inadequacies or errors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN operations in Somalia, Bosnia and Rwanda have been undertaken in widely differing political circumstances, and with varying degrees of security in theatre.

Nevertheless, all these operations have demonstrated the importance of ensuring that the mandates for such missions are clear and precise; that peacekeeping operations must remain impartial and operate with the consent of the parties; that it is essential to maintain unity of command; and that the success of operations depends on member states making available the necessary resources in terms of both personnel and funding.

Iran

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Iran Government's reaction to the UN resolution alleging human rights violations in Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Iranian Government have yet to respond substantively to the Resolution passed on 23 December 1994 by the United Nations General Assembly. We urge the Iranian Government to respond positively by improving its behaviour and reducing cause for international concern with its record. If, as they have previously stated, the Iranians contest the accuracy of the information presented by the special representative they should let him visit Iran to investigate the situation for himself.

Israel

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Israeli Government on the effect on the peace process of expansion of Israeli settlements in areas that are the subject of negotiation with the Palestinian national authority.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We consider that all settlements in the occupied territories, including east Jerusalem, are illegal and an obstacle to peace. With our EU partners, we are in frequent contact with the Israeli Government, whom we regularly remind of their obligations under the fourth Geneva convention. The EU issued a statement on 5 January which called for the total cessation of work on settlements.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and commonwealth Affairs what recent progress has been made in releasing Palestinian prisoners held by the Israelis.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: When Peres and Arafat met in Gaza on 9 January, they agreed to establish a joint committee and an Israeli ministerial panel to consider further prisoner releases. We have repeatedly called on the Israelis to speed up prisoner releases as a confidence-building measure.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs whether, under the terms of the Oslo agreement, the election of a Palestinian self-governing authority depends upon the withdrawal of Israeli troops.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Article XIII of the declaration of principles on redeployment of Israeli forces states:

> 1. After the entry into force of the Declaration of Principles, and not later than the eve of elections for the Council (Palestinian Interim Self-Government authority), a redeployment of Israeli military forces in the West Bank and Gaza Strip will take place, in addition to the withdrawal of Israeli forces (from the Gaza Strip and Jericho Area).
> 2. In redeploying its military forces, Israel will be guided by the principle that its military forces should be redeployed outside populated areas.

3. Further redeployments to specified locations will be gradually implemented commensurate with the assumption of responsibility for public order and internal security by the Palestinian police force pursuant to Article VIII above (on Public Order and Security).

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the desirability of holding early elections.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have continually urged on both the Israelis and the Palestinians the importance of maintaining momentum in their negotiations over elections and the related question of redeployment in the west bank. Early elections would contribute to genuine peace in the region.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the high commission in Nairobi on the extent of ethnic clashes in the Rift valley in Kenya just before Christmas; and what the role of the Kenyan Government was in this activity.

Mr. Baldry: There were no clashes between different ethnic communities in the areas at that time.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the causes of current unrest in north-west Somalia and the impact on British organisations working in the area.

Mr. Baldry: It is still not clear whether the unrest was caused by outsiders trying to destabilise the Egal administration or whether there has simply been a contest of local clan interests.

Under the state of emergency declared by the administration, all international agencies have been banned from Hargeisa until further notice. British organisations are now focussing their efforts on the humanitarian needs of the 150,000 Somalis displaced by the dispute. Operations outside Hargeisa have been largely unaffected by the unrest.

Eritrean Refugees

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made by the UN in repatriating Eritrean refugees in Sudan; and what impact the recent breakdown of diplomatic relationships between Eritrea and Sudan has had upon this.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 8,706 Eritrean refugees have so far been repatriated from Sudan since the beginning of the project organised by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in November 1994.

UNHCR reports that the breakdown of diplomatic relations between Sudan and Eritrea has had very little effect on the programme. It expects to repatriate a total of 25,000 refugees by the end of April this year.

EC Own Resources

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects that the 31 October 1994 Council decision on the system of the European Communities own resources will have been ratified in all member states.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for the member states concerned, since under article 201 of the treaty of European Union it depends on the completion of their respective constitutional requirements. I understand that the necessary procedures are under way in most, if not all, member states and that a number are likely to complete these procedures shortly.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which member states have so far adopted the Council decision on the system of the European Communities own resources in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements as laid down under article 201 of the treaty on European Union; and on what dates.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that three member states have so far adopted the own resources decision, in accordance with their constitutional requirements.

Denmark: 16 December 1994;

France: 20 December 1994; and United Kingdom: Royal Assent received on 16 January 1995.

Iraqi Assets

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total current value of Iraqi assets held by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom does not hold any Iraqi assets. However, the Bank of England advises that the value of Iraqi assets frozen in the United Kingdom was $784,000,000 as at 30 June 1994. This figure includes private as well as Iraqi Government deposits.

PRIME MINISTER

Worcester (Visit)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make an official visit to Worcester.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 19 January.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 19 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Drug Education

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to co-ordinate the Department of Trade and Industry with the Departments of Health and Education in respect of drug education and solvent abuse.

The Prime Minister: The Government recognise the threat of solvent abuse and, principally through our health promotion, prevention and education initiatives, are working to tackle the problem. The Department of Health has the main policy responsibility and works as necessary alongside other Departments, including as appropriate the Departments for Education, Trade and Industry, and the Home Office.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Policy Objectives

12. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the objectives of Her Majesty's Government's policy for Northern Ireland for 1995.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: We will continue to build on the progress already made towards securing permanent peace, economic prosperity and a widely acceptable comprehensive political settlement founded on the principles of democracy and consent.

Criminal Justice System

13. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to bring the criminal justice system in Northern Ireland into line with that in the rest of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: The Government are preparing a number of measures to improve the operation of the criminal justice system. Many of these are based upon examples and experiences from other parts of the UK while taking into account the particular needs of Northern Ireland.

Fair Employment

14. Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to reform the Fair Employment Act 1989.

15. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review the case for additional power to be given to the Fair Employment Commission.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I await the outcome of the review of employment equality in Northern Ireland now being undertaken by the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights.

Radio Transmissions (Health and Safety)

16. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what reports he has received on the health and safety implications of radio transmissions in Crossmaglen.

Sir John Wheeler: A report has been received, produced by Coghill Research Laboratories and entitled, "Electro Magnetic Fields and Radiation and Health in Crossmaglen".

Illegal Weapons

17. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many illegal weapons have been recovered or surrendered since the beginning of the ceasefire.

Sir John Wheeler: In the period from 1 September to 31 December 1994, 31 firearms and one mortar launcher were recovered.

Trade Union Talks

18. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will next meet trade union representatives to discuss the future prospects for new jobs and economic development in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

27. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next plans to meet the Irish Congress of Trade Union to discuss the peace process.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to meet representatives of the Northern Ireland committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions soon to discuss issues raised in its recently published document, "Investing in Peace—an Interim Programme for Reconstruction".

Fuel Prices

19. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the trend on fuel prices in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Statistical information on changes in fuel prices is collected on a United Kingdom-wide basis. Information on regional variations is not available.

Post-ceasefire Talks

20. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have taken place with groups representing victims of sectarian violence regarding their role in the post-ceasefire talks.

Sir John Wheeler: None; nor am I aware of a desire on the part of groups representing victims of violence to play such a role.

Disability Benefits

21. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many unsuccessful (a) invalidity benefit and (b) disability living allowance applications have been appealed in the last six months.

Mr. Moss: In the period June 1994 to November 1994 a total of 583 invalidity benefit and 1,001 disability living allowance appeals have been received in the Social Security Agency.

Budget Estimates

22. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what adjustments have been made to the Northern Ireland Office budget estimates as a consequence of the cessation of violence.

Sir John Wheeler: As my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 6 December, the outcome for Northern Ireland of the 1994 public expenditure survey reflects a reallocation of some £180 million from the law and order protective and miscellaneous services vote made in the light of the terrorist ceasefires. This figure represents a major reduction in the anticipated resource requirement for criminal damage compensation payments across the survey period, and reduced expenditure on RUC overtime and is a welcome boost which will benefit important economic and social programmes.

Any resumption of terrorist violence will, of course, require a restoration of this reallocated provision.

Economic Development

23. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Northern Ireland economy.

Mr. Ancram: The Northern Ireland economy has performed well over the last year. Employees in employment in Northern Ireland rose by 1.2 per cent. in the year ending September 1994. Unemployment, seasonally adjusted, fell by 7.7 per cent. in the year ending November 1994. In addition, the output of Northern Ireland manufacturing industry expanded by 4.4 per cent. between the second quarter of 1993 and the second quarter of 1994.

Irish Language

24. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new proposals he has to increase the use of the Irish language.

Mr. Ancram: The Government seek to encourage respect for, and appreciation of, cultural diversity in Northern Ireland and to respond positively, where practical, to soundly based requests for assistance for Irish language projects. On 6 December 1994 a draft order was laid before Parliament which includes a power to enable district councils to erect street names in a second language, other than English. In practice, the second language is most likely to be Irish.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to enable students wishing to study at a non-denominational institution to train to be teachers in Irish-medium schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many non-denominational educational establishments currently offer courses in Irish as a main or subsidiary subject in primary phase initial teacher training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: One.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps the Department of Education for Northern Ireland intends to take to improve the design and content of the BEd course in Celtic at St. Mary's College; which interest groups are being consulted; when changes are likely to be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My Department is examining proposals from the college for a re-designed course which takes into account the views expressed by various interest groups. Changes are unlikely to be in place before September 1996.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the research projects undertaken during the past five years at St. Mary's college, Belfast into the teaching of Irish in Irish-medium schools; what public funding was provided for them; what research obligations are imposed on teacher training college lecturers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: No empirical research projects have been undertaken. There are no research obligations imposed on college lecturers.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the BEd course in Celtic at St. Mary's college, Belfast has been retained specifically for the purpose of training students to teach in Irish-medium primary schools; what percentage of this course is taught and assessed through the medium of Irish; what percentage of the teaching material is in the Irish language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The decision to retain the course took account of the then growing needs of the Irish-medium primary schools. All of the course is taught and assessed through the medium of Irish and approximately 80 per cent. of the teaching material is in the Irish language.

Water Industry

25. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the water industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Moss: The Government are committed to the privatisation of water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland. However, as already announced, this will not be possible in the lifetime of the present Parliament. In the interim, as announced on 29 June 1994, Official Report, columns 550-51, it is intended to establish the Department of the Environment's Water Executive as a next steps agency not later than 1 April 1996.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

26. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he is reviewing the duties and deployment of the RUC.

Sir John Wheeler: Operational policing is a matter for the Chief Constable, but there are no current plans to change the authorised establishment or structure of the RUC.

Framework Document

28. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the publication of the framework document.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Derbyshire North-East (Mr. Barnes) earlier today.

Primary School Pupils

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of pupils enrolled at each controlled primary school in the constituencies of Belfast, West and Belfast, North in each of the past five years.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

Housing

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by Housing Executive region the total numbers on housing waiting lists and the number of A1 applicants.

Mr. Moss: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by its chief executive that the total numbers on the housing waiting list and the number of applicants with A1 status at 31 December 1994, by Housing Executive region, were as follows:

Northern Ireland Housing Executive Region	Waiting list	A1 applicants
Belfast	7,297	704
South East	4,257	278
South	2,531	120
North East	4,137	225

Total	22,740	1,810

Stormont (Fire)

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which companies have recently been carrying out refurbishment work at Parliament buildings, Stormont.

Mr. Moss: The main contractor for the current refurbishment scheme is McCombe Brothers (Antrim) Ltd. The nominated sub-contractors are Weir and McQuiston Ltd. for electrical services, Stothers (Mechanical and electrical) Ltd. for mechanical services and Express Lift Co for lift services.

Downpatrick Area Plan

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to upgrade and revise the Downpatrick area plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: The Department has a programme of area plan work and I regret that it will be several years before a review of the Down area plan can begin. However, the housing needs and development pressures of Downpatrick are monitored on a continuous basis and, if necessary, proposals can be considered as amendments to the existing plan.

Ulster Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the attendance figures for 1994 reported by the Ulster museum, including its outstations, with the percentage change from 1993.

Mr. Ancram: In 1994 a total of 269,046 people visited the Ulster museum and the Armagh county museum—an increase of 0.28 per cent. on the attendance figure for 1993.

Driving Licences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information will appear on the new plastic card type driving licence when it is introduced; what will be the dimensions of the card; and what plans he has to make the new style licence common throughout (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Community countries.

Mr. Moss: There has been a plastic card to accompany the NI driving licence since 1985. I will be launching a new style credit card size plastic card later this month. The information which will appear on the new style card is as follows:—surname, main forename, date and town of birth, date of expiry, driver number, sample signature and photograph of holder. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency in Swansea plans to introduce a plastic card in the UK from 1 July 1996. It is up to each individual member state to decide how best to meet EU requirements on driving licences.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the original time scale for the introduction of a plastic card type driving licence in Northern Ireland; and when he now expects it to be introduced.

Mr. Moss: There has been a plastic photographic counterpart to accompany the Northern Ireland driving licence since 1985. A new style credit card size plastic card is being launched in Northern Ireland later this month. Further changes may be required to meet the requirements of the second EC directive on driver licensing which will come into effect on 1 July 1996. The final format of the licence is still under discussion.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the paper part of the Northern Ireland driving licence was increased in size when the European Communities model was introduced, and not designed so that it could be folded down to the dimensions of the former licence.

Mr. Moss: The size of the paper part of the NI driving licence is subject to the requirements of the first EC directive on driver licensing. It was increased in size from January 1991 to meet those requirements and to accommodate the inclusion of lorry and bus entitlements. The paper part of the NI driving licence is the same size as the GB licence. The design of the paper part so that it could fold to the dimensions of the former licence was constrained by the fact that it had to comply with the 1st EC directive.

EMPLOYMENT

Northern Region

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will rank, in order of the reductions of unemployment achieved, the initiatives taken by his Department in the Northern region.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are reducing unemployment throughout the United Kingdom by following sound economic policies based on permanently low inflation, removing unnecessary regulations which obstruct job creation, and by active measures to help unemployed people. These policies have already helped reduce unemployment by more than 550,000 in the United Kingdom as a whole and by nearly 16,000 in the Northern region.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the annual budgets for each TEC for each year since their creation.

Mr. Paice: Funding made available to each training and enterprise council in England, for each year since their creation, for activities funded by the Employment Department, is shown in the following table:

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the latest available information on entrants who have entered (a) community action and (b) training for work by (i) whether male or female, (ii) duration of employment, (iii) ethnic origin and (iv) whether they have a disability, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole.

Miss Widdecombe: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the percentage of (a) men and (b) women who are currently unemployed for each year between the ages of 40 and 50 years.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many individuals unemployed in the years 1979, 1985 and 1994 were previously self-employed.

Mr. Oppenheim: Latest estimates from the summer 1994 Labour Force Survey for Great Britain show that there were 235,000 people who were ILO unemployed and who reported their employment status in their last job as being self-employed. Comparable figures for 1979 and 1985 are not available.

Unemployed Persons (Mortgages)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many individuals who became unemployed in each year from 1979 to 1994 were previously self-employed with mortgages outstanding on their homes.

Mr. Oppenheim: The available information from the summer 1994 Labour Force Survey for Great Britain shows that there were 92,000 ILO unemployed people, resident in households buying their accommodation with a mortgage or loan, who reported their employment status in their last job as self-employed. Equivalent figures for summer 1993 and summer 1992 are 121,000 and 114,000 respectively. No comparable figures are available prior to 1992.

Objective 3 Funding

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will publish local authorities' allocations of funds from the European social fund objective 3; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Allocation of funds for objective 3 of the European social fund for 1995, on the basis earlier agreed by the objective 3 monitoring committee, were notified to sector managers and members of the monitoring committee, which includes local authority representatives, earlier this month.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the unsecured and secured creditors being dealt with by the receiver for the South Thames training and enterprise council;

(2) if he will list the names of individuals and organisations who are creditors of South Thames TEC in (a) the parliamentary constituency of Lewisham, Deptford and (b) the London borough of Lewisham.

Mr. Paice: The only secured creditor for South Thames training and enterprise council is the Employment Department. Other creditors are a matter for the receiver and I understand that he is assembling a list.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were undergoing training on programmes contracted for by South Thames TEC on 1 December 1994 and 1 January 1995 in the constituency of Lewisham, Deptford, in the London borough of Lewisham, and in total.

Mr. Paice: This information is available only for the South Thames area as a whole. It is not broken down by constituency or borough. Figures for the South Thames area are shown in the following table:

South Thames training and enterprise council—Estimated trainees for the boroughs of Lambeth, Southwark, Lewisham and Greenwich

Date	Number
Youth training and training credits
4 December 1994	2,750
1 January 1995	2,693
Training for work
4 December 1994	3,359
1 January 1995	3,316
Total
4 December 1994	6,109
1 January 1995	6,009

The figures are subject to final submission and verification of all accounting period 9 and 10 claims.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed by the South Thames TEC on 1 September 1994, 1 December 1994 and 1 January 1995.

Mr. Paice: I understand that South Thames training and enterprise council had 162 employees on 1 September 1994, 162 employees on 1 December 1994 and 128 employees on 1 January 1995.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of people employed by training providers and business support programmes which were party to South Thames TEC contracts as of 1 December 1994 in (a) the parliamentary constituency of Lewisham, Deptford and (b) the London borough of Lewisham.

Mr. Paice: This information is not collected either by South Thames training and enterprise council or by the Employment Department.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 16 January to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison), Official Report, column 331, if he will list the providers of training and business support programmes within the area covered by the South Thames TEC to whom letters of comfort have been issued, and those to whom no such letters have been sent.

Mr. Paice: As the information is contained in a large list, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Employment Regulations

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what representation he has made to the EEC about the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981; and when he expects a response;

(2) what are the implications for the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 of the revision of the definition of undertakings, with particular reference to compulsory competitive tendering;

(3) what proposals he has to recognise those contractual liabilities arising from redundancy liabilities under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 which may be incapable of being passed to incoming contractors if the regulations are changed.

Mr. Oppenheim: Various representations have been made to the European Commission about the 1977 acquired rights directive, to which the regulations give effect, including concerns about its application to the contracting out of activities and the damaging effect it may have on the rescue of insolvent businesses. In September the Commission produced a proposal to amend the 1977 directive which aimed, inter alia, to distinguish between the transfer of only an activity of an undertaking and the genuine transfer of an undertaking; and to provide for greater flexibility in insolvency situations.

The proposal is still under discussion. It is too early to say when agreement will be reached or what changes to the regulations, or transitional arrangements, may be required.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Pensions

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what resources he has allocated to the War Pensions Agency to ensure that welfare officers have advised all disabled war pensioners of their statutory rights concerning disregard on local authority charges.

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Ms Joan Walley, dated 18 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about resources allocated to ensure that the War Pensions Agency Welfare Officers advise all disabled war pensioners of their statutory rights concerning disregards on local authority charges.

It is incumbent upon welfare officers to provide a professional and effective advice service to all disabled war pensioners with whom they come into contact. As part of that service, welfare officers would normally cover advice regarding statutory rights concerning disregards on local authority charges. In addition, information on the statutory rights to disregard of local authority charges is contained in leaflets issued to all successful claimants to War Pension, under standard procedures.

The exact information you request on the resources allocated to this specific activity is not available, as resources are not allocated on an individual advice item basis. I can however tell you that the total resources allocated to the welfare service during the current year, which include this area of advice, is £5.6 million.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Mortgage Internet Payments

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual cost of mortgage interest payments to people in receipt of income support.

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated annual amount of mortgage interest included in the assessment for people in receipt of income support is £1,082 million—source: income support statistical inquiry February 1994.

Doncaster and Mexborough Benefit Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list for the Doncaster and Mexborough benefit offices how many claims for assistance from the social fund have been made during each of the last 12 months; and what the figure was for each year since 1990;

(2) what is the current average length of time taken to decide on an application for assistance from the social fund (a) nationally and (b) at each of the Benefits Agency offices in the Doncaster and Mexborough area.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking for details of the number of claims made to the Social Fund (SF) and the current average clearance times for these applications both nationally and in the Benefits Agency's Doncaster and Mexborough offices.

Although information is available relating to Doncaster, information relating specifically to Mexborough is not available in the exact format requested. Prior to the formation of the Benefits Agency in April 1991 Mexborough formed part of Rotherham South. Figures have therefore been provided at Annex A for the total number of applications to the SF in 1990/91 for both Doncaster and Rotherham South. From april 1991 Mexborough became one of four offices making up the Rother and Dearne District and information has been provided at Annex B for the total number of claims to the SF from 1991/92 to 1993/94 at Doncaster and Rother and Dearne Districts.

At Annex C I have provided figures for the number of claims to the SF at the Doncaster and Rother and Dearne Districts in each of the last twelve months.

It is not possible to provide the current average length of time taken to decide an application for assistance from the SF because statistics are not collated in this way. However, I have provided at Annex D figures showing the percentage of claims cleared within two varying timescales; these are provided at a national level and for the Doncaster and Rother and Dearne Districts.

Copies of all the Annexes have been place in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and proportion of all pensioners had no income from any source other than from state benefits for each year since 1990.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table.

All pensioner units with no income from any source other than State benefits

Year	Number million	Proportion per cent.
1990	1.1	16
1990–91	1	15
1992	1.1	15

Notes:

1. Estimates taken from the family expenditure surveys 1990, 1990–91 and 1992.
2. Figures for 1990 and 1991 were combined due to sample size problems.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioner households has been dependent on state benefits for at least 50 per cent. of their income for each year since 1990.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The percentage of pensioner units dependant on state benefits for at least 50 per cent. of their income was 71 per cent. in 1990, 70 per cent. in 1990–91 and 70 per cent. in 1992.

Notes:

1. Estimates taken from the family expenditure surveys 1990, 1990–91 and 1992.
2. Figures for 1990 and 1991 were combined due to sample size problems.
3. Pensioner units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples had incomes below one half of average household income in each year since 1979.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Consistent estimates are available for the years shown in the table.

Proportion of pensioners with net income below half the contemporary average for the whole population

		1979	1981	1987	1988–89	1990–91	1991–92
Single pensioners	BHC	(16)	(9)	(23)	(31)	(34)	(29)
	AHC	(12)	(8)	(22)	(42)	(44)	(40)
Pensioner couples	BHC	(16)	(11)	(20)	32	33	29
	AHC	(21)	(16)	26	33	31	28

Notes:

1. Analysis is based on equivalised household income from the households below average income series. Estimates in brackets () are particularly sensitive to the choice of equivalence scale used. The results for single pensioners, for any one period of time, are highly sensitive to the assumptions employed in adjusting income for household size. For example, the BHC figure for single pensioners in 1979 of 16 per cent. could, on alternative assumptions, be anywhere between 3 per cent. and 53 per cent. The picture of changes over time is not so sensitive to the choice of assumptions. For more information on this see appendix 4 of "Households Below Average Income: a statistical analysis 1979–1991/92", a copy of which is in the Library.
2. BHC means before housing costs; AHC means after housing costs.
3. 1988–89, 1990–91, 1991–92 refers to data from the combined calendar years eg. 1988–89 means 1988 and 1989 combined.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the state pension for (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples would have been in April 1995 had the pension been uprated in line with the higher of the retail price index or earnings since 1980.

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is estimated that the weekly rate of category A basic retirement pension would be £79.45 from April 1995 and the combined rate of category A and category B basic retirement pension payable to a couple would be £127.15 if the rates had been increased in line with the higher of earnings or prices since 1980.[1] Expenditure on retirement pension would, as a result, be increased by an estimated £9.7 billion in the 1995–96 financial year.[2]

Notes:

[1] Estimates provided by Department of Social Security, analytical services division—in each step of the calculation the benefits have been rounded to the nearest 5p;
the retail price index (all items) as published by the Central Statistical Office has been used for prices uprating; earnings upratings have been calculated on the basis of the Employment Department's average earnings index (whole economy unadjusted) as amalgamated in the abstract of statistics published by the Department of Social Security, analytical services division.

[2] Estimate provided by the Government Actuary's department based on benefit rates calculated as per note 1.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioner households has been dependent on state benefits for at least 75 per cent. of their income for each year since 1990.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The percentage of pensioner units dependant on state benefits for at least 75 per cent. of their income was 50 per cent. in each of the years 1990, 1990–91 and 1992.

Notes:

1. Estimates taken from the family expenditure surveys 1990, 1990–1 and 1992.
2. Figures for 1990 and 1991 were combined due to sample size problems.
3. Pensioner units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of all pensioners, single pensioners and pensioner couples have total incomes of (a) £1, (b) £2, (c) £3, (d) £4 and (e) £5 above income support levels.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the tables.

Table 1: The number of pensioner benefit units with incomes in ranges up to £5 above income support (IS) threshold

Notes:

1. Caseloads figures have been rounded to the nearest 5,000, and the percentages have been rounded to the nearest percentage point.
2. The figures may not sum due to rounding.
3. A pensioner benefit unit is based on the pensions definition of a pensioner which is:
(i) Single pensioner—a single male aged 65 or over or a single female aged 60 or over
(ii) Pensioner couple—a couple where the husband is over state pension age.
4. Estimates are modelled results using data drawn from the 1990, 1991, 1992 family expenditure survey, uprated to 1994–95 prices and benefit levels.
5. The definitions of income used in the tables is income taken into account for IS purposes and excludes certain types of income, such as, attendance allowance, housing benefit and the portion of war pensions covered by IS disregards.

Social Fund

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund funeral payments were (a) claimed and (b) awarded in Blyth Valley in each year since 1989.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Ronnie Campbell, dated 18 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of funeral payments claimed and awarded in Blyth Valley.

Information is not available for 1989–90 and has therefore been provided at Annex A from 1990–91. With the formation of the Benefits Agency in April 1991 Blyth office became one of four offices making up the Northumberland District. Although information has been provided relating specifically to Blyth for 1990–91, from 1991–92 such information is not available and has therefore been provided for the Northumberland District.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Pensioners' Savings

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what weekly income pensioners with more than £3,000 savings are deemed to be receiving therefrom; and what assumptions as to interest rates lie behind this calculation.

Mr. Roger Evans: For income support claims, a deduction from benefit of £1 a week is made for each £250, or part of £250, held above £3,000 up to the upper capital limit of £8,000. Similar rules apply in housing benefit and council tax benefit, but the effect of the tapers which apply to those benefits means that housing benefit is only reduced by 65p and council tax benefit by 20p for each £1 above a set level. Additionally, a higher upper capital limit of £16,000 applies in housing benefit and council tax benefit. The formula for taking account of capital above £3,000 does not imply any particular return on investments. It ensures that help is targeted on those with the least resources, while not entirely denying help to those with moderate capital.

Child Support

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will respond to the report of the Fifth report of the Social Security Committee, Session 1993–94, HC 470, on the operation of the Child Support Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We have considered carefully the recent report of the Social Security Select Committee and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to receive the report of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration on the operations of the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I have received the report today, and I am considering it carefully. While I am disappointed that the agency has not met the standards of efficiency and administration it would have wished, I note that the ombudsman recognises that steps have been taken in all cases he investigated to avoid a repetition of errors. Measures to improve quality, accuracy and customer service will be an important component of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's response to the Social Security Select Committee.

HIV/AIDS (Discrimination)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list organisations representing people with HIV/AIDS who responded to his Department's consultation on Government measures to tackle discrimination against disabled people.

Mr. Hague: Over 1,100 responses to the consultation document were received, including those from the following organisations: the Terrence Higgins Trust; United Kingdom Forum on HIV and Human Rights; National Network of Body Positive Groups; the Scottish AIDS Monitor; AIDS and Housing Project; Blackliners; Positively Women and the Cambridge AIDS Helpline.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how housing benefit transitional payments will be treated from April.

Mr. Roger Evans: With fewer than 4,000 people expected to remain eligible for housing benefit transitional payments from April 1995, we have decided to convert future potential payments to lump sums. These payments will be made as soon as possible after 5 April. The transitional payments unit in Glasgow will then close.

Disabled People (Discrimination)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish an analysis of the responses to the Governments' recent consultation document on discrimination against disabled people.

Mr. Hague: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the document "A Government Consultation on Measures to Tackle Discrimination against Disabled People: An Analysis of the Responses."

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Veal Crates

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has made in the Council of Ministers to ban veal crates in the European Union.

Mrs. Browning: In negotiations leading to the adoption of Council directive 91/629/EEC on the welfare of calves, the United Kingdom pressed hard for a text which would rule out the veal crate as a production system. A text falling short of this objective was adopted by majority vote with the United Kingdom voting against. It has remained our objective since then to get this matter re-considered.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons he has not relied upon article 3b of the treaty of Rome to impose a ban on the export of calves for veal production.

Mrs. Browning: Legal advice is that recourse to article 36 would not be possible for this purpose. There is Community legislation occupying the field and a ban on the export of calves for veal production would not be justifiable as proportionate in relation to animal welfare objectives.

Fishing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will define the word "loosely" as used in the December fisheries agreement in respect of the basing of control of fishing effort in western waters on member state quota entitlements.

Mr. Jack: I cannot identify the reference to which the hon. Member refers. The agreement reached at the December Fisheries Council provides for effort levels to allow each member state, for each fishery, to take up fully its fishing possibilities for species subject to TACs, whether allocated or not, as well as species not subject to TACs.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he assures United Kingdom fishermen, in his letter after the December Fisheries Council, that no new measures to control effort will need to be imposed on the United Kingdom industry; and whether his assurance is given in the light of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992 being brought into force or dropped.

Mr. Jack: The agreement reached at December Fisheries Council states that effort levels will be set to allow member states to take up fully their fishing possibilities for TAC and non-TAC species and that an acceptable way for a member state to regulate fishing effort will be for it to monitor the activity of its fleet and to take appropriate action if, on this basis, the effort reaches—or is about to reach—the permitted effort level. So long as present effort levels do not increase, it should not be necessary to impose new measures to control effort.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many French, Spanish and Dutch fisherman have been prosecuted in the last year by the Commission in relation to fishing offences; what were the offences; and what penalties were imposed.

Mr. Jack: None. Responsibility for enforcement of the common fisheries policy, including action to prosecute fishermen for fishing offences, rests with member states.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 January 1995]: The number of staff within MAFF who have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer, as required under the civil service management code, since February 1993 and who made and application to join the company is one in both cases.

State Veterinary Service

Mr. Cox : To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the British Veterinary Association to discuss the future of the State Veterinary Service.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 January 1995]: Neither my right hon. Friend, nor I have yet had the pleasure of meeting the British Veterinary Association; however, I have a meeting arranged in February. The BVA met the previous Minister, my right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard) on 5 May 1994 when a number of matters were discussed but not, I believe, the future of the State Veterinary Service.

WALES

Hip Replacements

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hip replacement operations have been carried out in each year from 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Richards: Estimates of the number of complete and partial hip replacement operations carried out as a principal or subsidiary procedure are given in the following table:

Year	Number
1983–84	1,8[illegible]
1984–85	1,[illegible]
1985–86	1,894
1986–87	1,985
1987–88	1,697
1988–89	2,167
1989–90	2,297
1990–91	1,944
1991–92	2,699
1992–93	2,897

Organ Donors Register

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have responded to advertisements by his Department for the organ donors register since September 1994; how many have received application forms; when he expects to have responded to all inquiries; and if he will make a statement on the delays to date.

Mr. Richards: The Welsh Office has to date received 1,174 inquiries in response to the advertisement for the new NHS organ donor card; all have been acknowledged. The Central Office of Information is in the process of producing a bilingual version of the new organ donor card and these will be dispatched as soon as possible.

Community Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the value and number of properties purchased and owned by health authorities and departments of social services for the purposes of community care specific to the need to close institutions that previously housed those individuals now living in such properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not available centrally.

Overhead Power Lines

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of research into the effects of overhead power lines on the health of individuals in close proximity.

Mr. Richards: The Government obtain advice on radiation risk from the National Radiological Protection Board, which has concluded that there is no persuasive biological evidence of a cancer risk to people living near sources of electrical supply.

The United Kingdom national case control study of childhood cancer is a long-term study which is currently examining the possible influence of a number of agents, including exposure to electromagnetic radiation, on the incidence of childhood cancer. The findings of the study will be published in about three years' time.

Internet

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if all higher education institutions in Wales are connected to the Janet computer system and Internet.

Mr. Richards: Yes.

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if (a) the Welsh Development Agency, (b) the Development Board for Rural Wales and (c) the Welsh tourist board are connected to the Internet system.

Mr. Redwood: The Development Board for Rural Wales has recently been connected to the Internet system. The Welsh Development Agency and the Wales Tourist Board are making plans to do so.

Welsh Language

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the public bodies in Wales that have been given notice by the Welsh Language Board to propose a scheme in accordance with section 5 of the Welsh Language Act 1993.

Mr. Richards: No public bodies will be given notice to prepare a Welsh language scheme until guidelines as to the form and content of such schemes, issued under section 9 of the Act, have been approved by my right hon. Friend and by Parliament. The Welsh Language Board is currently consulting on draft guidelines.

Animal Diseases

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current number of cattle aged 30 months or under with enzootic bovine leukosis; what was the figure 12 months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are currently no clinical cases of enzootic bovine leukosis in cattle in Wales and there were none 12 months ago.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of Dourine were reported in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No cases of Dourine have occurred in Wales since 1985.

Tir Cymen

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what effect the reduction in grant aid to the Countryside Council for Wales is going to have on the budget available for Tir Cymen schemes in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend is anxious to ensure that the reduction in the Countryside Council for Wales' grant-in-aid should not affect the Tir Cymen scheme. He has therefore agreed the provision of an additional £500,000 in the council's grant-in-aid for 1995–96, which will enable a further 200 or so farmers to participate in the scheme next year.

Local Authorities (Local Purchasing)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he has received from training and enterprise councils in Wales of the additional employment secured by ensuring a policy of local purchasing where possible by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: This information is not collected centrally.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in respect of (a) each county council, (b) each district council and (c) each of the proposed unitary councils and for Wales as a whole the estimated amount of money which his office will provide to fund the cost of local government reorganisation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has announced total funding of £43 million for 1994–95 and 1995–96.

The sum of £20 million is being provided for information technology changes in the form of supplementary credit approvals. An SCA of £38,955 was issued to each county and district council on 31 October—a total of £1.753 million. The remaining £18.247 million will be distributed to the unitary authorities according to a formula, consultation on which does not finish until 3 February. The allocations set out in the following table are therefore provisional. £3.5 million will be provided to district and county councils in 1995–96 for compensation costs, again in the form of SCAs. The Welsh Office will be discussing the distribution arrangements with the local authority associations in due course. My right hon. Friend informed the House on 14 December that, if some authorities decided to make major administrative savings at the point of reorganisation, he would make more money available to facilitate this.

Finally, £19.5 million will be provided to the unitary authorities in 1995–96 for their running costs. The distribution is set out in the following table. I am pleased to be able to announce that this funding will, subject to the approval of the House, take the form of special grant. I expect the necessary report to be laid shortly and to be debated at the same time as the other local government finance reports for 1995–96.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the attendance figures for 1994 reported by the National Museum of Wales, including its outstations, with the percentage change from 1993.

Mr. Richards: A total of 872,936 people visited the National Museum of Wales during 1994, a decrease of 8.3 per cent. over the attendance reported for 1993.

Private Patients

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many private in-patients and out-patients were treated in NHS hospitals; and what was the total income earned from private patients in each of the last five years, and by health authority.

Mr. Richards [holding answer 13 January 1995]: Information on the number of private in-patient cases, out-patient attendances and day case attendances is given in the table. Individual patients may appear more than once in the table.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1994, Official Report, column 372, what percentage of total admissions was represented by emergency hospital admissions.

Mr. Richards [holding answer 17 January 1995]: The information is given in the following table:

HEALTH

Home Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) home helps and (b) district nurses per 1,000 people over the age of 65 years there were in England for each of the years 1989 to 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: For England, figures are available only for home helps employed by social services departments. They do not take account of home helps in the independent sector, including those working in services that have been contracted out. For home helps directly employed by SSDs only, the figures for 1989 to 1993 are 7.5, 7.4, 7.2, 7.1 and 6.6 respectively.

The figures for district nurses are shown in the table.

District nurses	1.3	1.4	1.3	1.3	1.2

Sources:

The home help figures are derived from the annual Department of Health census of local authority social services staff.

The district nurses figures are derived from the Department's non-medical work force census.

The population data used are the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys mid-year figures for England.

Northumberland Ambulance Service

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff have been employed by the Northumberland ambulance service for each year since 1987.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for 1987 to 1992 are not available centrally. As at 30 September 1993, there were 680 whole-time equivalents employed by Northumbria Ambulance Service national health service trust.

Health Centres

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many health centres in each of the English regional health authority areas have been sold to general practitioners in each year since 1987;

(2) what assessment she has made of the benefits and disbenefits of selling health centres to general practitioners.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities and national health service trusts should regularly review their property portfolios in the context of how patient services should best be provided. Decisions about sales are for regional health authorities or individual NHS trusts to make. There are no figures available centrally showing how many sales of health centres to general practitioners have been completed since 1987.

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department is undertaking into use by local authorities of the independent sector in their provision of community care services.

Mr. Bowis: Local authority use of the independent sector is continuously monitored through regular statistics collected by the Department on residential accommodation and day and domiciliary services, which separately identify services provided by the independent sector.

The Department has also commissioned research on the mixed economy of care, which will look at local authority provision in all sectors.

Accident and Emergency Units

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients admitted to accident and emergency units were aged 75 years or over in each year since 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Ordinary admissions and day cases: accident and emergency

	All ages	75 and over	75 and over (per cent.)
1990–91	82,015	12,875	15.7
1991–92	83,173	13,077	15.7
1992–93	83,281	12,632	15.2

Cold Weather Deaths

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of deaths for each of the years 1980 to 1994 linked to cold weather; and what percentage of those people were aged over 60 years.

Mr. Bowis: No estimate of deaths linked to cold weather can be made.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration has been given by her Department to the funding of a television advertising campaign advising parents of the steps that can be taken significantly to reduce the risk of cot deaths; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The use of television and press advertising was an essential element of the "Back to Sleep" campaign launched in 1991, when the advice being promoted about a baby's sleeping position represented a significant departure from most parents' practice at the time. The success of this approach is evident both from the dramatic fall in the number of cot deaths that has since occurred—from 1,008 in 1991 to 442 in 1993, England and Wales—and from recent evidence about changes that have taken place in infant care practice. Now that the message about sleeping position has become widely accepted, the Government consider that the current initiatives designed to provide comprehensive advice represent a practicable means of helping parents.

Advice on reducing the risks is widely available. First, good practice advice on baby care is available to pregnant women and new parents through direct contact with midwives, health visitors, general practitioners, obstetricians, and paediatricians in the course of routine care. Secondly, advice is included in the Health Education Authority's publications, the Pregnancy Book given free to first-time pregnant women, and Birth to Five, given free to first-time parents. Thirdly, the Department of Health leaflet, Reducing the Risk of Cot Death, continues to be available and almost 5 million have been distributed to date.

The recently announced national anti-smoking campaign managed by the Health Education Authority further supports initiatives on cot death. The campaign, which is intended to reduce smoking among adults, and especially parents, is particularly relevant to cot death as smoking is known to be a major risk factor.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amount of correspondence she has received on the issue of cot deaths over (a) the last 12 months and (b) since 17 November 1994.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the amount of correspondence received in the Department as at 17 January in which this subject was the primary topic, is contained in the table.

Date		Numbers
18 January 1994 to 17 January 1995	Correspondence answered by Ministers	172

"Purchasing in Practice"

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many copies of the first issue of the NHS Executive's publication "Purchasing in Practice" were published; how much they cost to design, print and distribute; and how frequently the NHS Executive intends to produce this publication in future.

Mr. Sackville: A total of 20,000 copies of the first issue of the National Health Service Executive's bi-monthly newsletter, "Purchasing in Practice", were issued in December 1994 at a unit cost of 65 pence for design, printing and distribution. We regard this publication as a vital part of keeping all interested parties, particularly health authorities and general practitioner fundholders, informed about new developments to ensure health care purchasing is developed for the benefit of all patients.

Illegal Employment (Children)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will commission a study of the extent of the illegal employment of children.

Mr. Bowis: No. No significant evidence has been submitted to us to suggest that this is a problem in England.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the extent of the illegal employment of children as defined by the Employment of Children Act 1973.

Mr. Bowis: The framework of protection in England for children who work is contained in the Children and Young Persons Act 1933. Detailed controls are in local authority byelaws. We are aware of no significant evidence that the illegal employment of children is a widespread problem. The situation in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the reporting by proper authorities of suspected illegal employment of children.

Mr. Bowis: It is for local authorities to take what action they think necessary to control the employment of children.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration her Department has given to evidence gained in the United States of America or in any other country in regard to the value of the drug beta interferon in the treatment of multiple sclerosis; and whether she concludes from the evidence that the drug is of sufficient value to justify an early decision to license it for use within the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: Several companies are developing interferons for use in multiple sclerosis. These will be handled through the new European centralised licensing procedure-regulation 2309/93. Expert advice will be taken through the European procedure on all the evidence supplied, regardless of source country, to determine whether the product should receive an authorisation for use in countries within the European Union.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients will be involved in trials of new drugs designed to assist those suffering from multiple sclerosis; and when it is expected that these trials will be completed.

Mr. Sackville: At least seven new drugs are currently undergoing clinical trials in patients with multiple sclerosis. Since many of the trials are on-going, it is not possible to give the numbers of patients involved nor to give information on the completion dates of the trials.

Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 145, if she will consult with the relevant professional bodies in regard to the need to use suitable X-ray film for the detection of chronic bronchitis and emphysema.

Mr. Sackville: The Department would need more information before it could have a meaningful discussion with the relevant professional bodies. If the hon. member would care to write giving full details consideration will be given to opening discussions with the profession.

National Blood Authority

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total cost of writing to all blood donors about the reorganisation of the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave her on 9 December 1994 at column 400.

Patients' Complaints

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 323, on patient complaints, if she will now publish the information for 1993–94.

Mr. Malone: Information on patient complaints for 1993–94 will be published as soon as possible.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 December 1994, Official Report, column 401, on NHS expenditure, how much has been spent on private psychiatric care in each year since 1991–92.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter on private health insurance of 1 December 1994 to the Minister for Health.

Mr. Malone: I replied on 17 January 1995.

Secure Beds

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric beds and medium secure beds there were nationally and in each region in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The information requested will be placed in the Library.

Eye Tests

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the savings to the national health service budget since the abolition of the free eye test; and what would be the cost of restoring the free eye test (i) to all, (ii) to those over 60 years and (iii) those aged 65 years and over.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 13 January 1995]: Assuming the trend in sight tests apparent before the announcement of changes in November 1987, it is estimated that £70 million was saved in 1989–90 by restricting entitlement to national health service sight tests.

On the basis that this trend continues, and with the sight test fees remaining at the 1994–95 level, the cost of restoring free sight tests is estimated to be in the order of:

a) all people: £110 million
b) those aged 60 and over: £30 million
c) those aged 65 and over: £20 million

Nurses

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give for each year since 1981, on the same basis as tables A and C of "Statistical Bulletin 1944/11", the total numbers of whole time equivalent qualified and unqualified nurses and midwives, the total numbers of learners and the total numbers of other nurses and midwives employed in (a) the hospital and community health services, (b) the family health services and (c) private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics, and also the total numbers of Project 2000 students in each year.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The information is shown in the tables.

1. All figures are rounded to the nearest ten whole—time equivalents.
2. Totals may not equal sum of their component parts due to rounding.
3. Table II excludes learners and 'other' nursing and midwifery staff.
4. All nursing and midwifery figures exclude agency staff.
5. (—) denotes a zero value.
6. (n/a) denotes the figure is unavailable.
7. In Table II the figures for 'Total qualified staff', 1988 and 1993, differ from those published in the Statistical Bulletin 1994/11 due to practice nurses being incorrectly excluded from the total in Table 'C' of the Statistical Bulletin. The 'HCHS qualified staff' and 'HCHS unqualified staff' figures for 1988 in Table II have also been amended in this parliamentary question.

EDUCATION

Tribunal Decisions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list by college and by individual case the number of industrial tribunal and fair employment tribunal applications lodged against further education colleges in England for each year since 1990; how many cases have been upheld against the further education colleges; how many cases have resulted in a settlement which has involved payments being made by an education and library board; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Information concerning industrial tribunal matters is not held by this Department. Industrial tribunals are the responsibility of the Employment Department. Education and library boards are not a matter for this Department.

School Finances

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list by local education authority the total amount of balances held by schools in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: For the financial year ending on 31 March 1994, the following table provides the information requested in respect of all LEAs from whom the Department has received outturn statements prepared for that year under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

They also include the final balances shown in respect of schools which became grant-maintained during the course of the financial year.
2. All figures represent surplusses net of deficits.
3. "N/A" denotes that the LEA's outturn statement has not yet been made available to the Department.

Higher Education Students

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the estimate of the total number of full–time students in higher education not living in their family or parental home in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: Data on the numbers of full–time students in higher education not living in their parental or family home are not collected centrally. However, local education authorities in England and Wales provide data on the various rates of grant paid by them in mandatory awards made to students domiciled in their areas. Award holders living with their parents while attending their courses normally receive a parental home rate of grant. Students who live away from the parental home while studying normally receive a different rate, as do those who are treated for awards purposes as independent of their parents and who live in their own homes while attending their courses. The numbers of award holders not in receipt of the parental home rate in the academic years 1988–89 to 1992–93—the latest year for which data are available—are shown in the table.

1993–93	583,800

[1] The table includes students who receive partial or nil maintenance grants because of high parental or other income.

Student Housing

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what study has been undertaken of the need for, and provision for, student housing in England and Wales.

Mr. Boswell: We are not aware of any studies of student residential accommodation needs and provision in England and Wales. These are matters for universities and colleges which, as independent, autonomous bodies, are responsible for making their own decisions about any student accommodation requirements for their students.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many new units of accommodation for students in higher education have been provided in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: The information is not collected centrally.

National Curriculum

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if she will set the proficiency standards in safety skills and survival required by key stage 2 in respect of school swimming; how she intends to ensure these standards are met; and what resources are made available;

(2) in respect of each local education authority, what assessment she has made of the achievement in respect of safety and skills and survival in respect of key stage 2 of the national curriculum; and which authorities and schools have failed to meet these standards.

Mr. Forth: The revised national curriculum for physical education requires that, by the age of 11, all pupils should be taught to swim unaided, competently and safely, for at least 25 m. They should also be taught the principles and skills of water safety and survival. These requirements begin to come into effect on 1 August 1996.

Detailed advice on safe practice in the teaching of swimming is included in the handbook "Safe Practice in Physical Education", which was first published in 1985 by the British Association of Advisers and Lecturers in Physical Education. A revised edition of the handbook was published in 1990 with the approval and recommendation of the, then, Department of Education and Science. The handbook includes advice about recommended teacher-tutor qualifications, supervision, pupils behaviour, pool safety and equipment. The handbook is currently subject to further revision and will be republished later this year.

The proficiency of individual pupils in reaching the standards prescribed in the national curriculum for physical education will be assessed by their teachers under arrangements which will be given statutory force in due course. The regular cycle of four-yearly inspections by the Office for Standards in Education will look, among other things, at each school's effectiveness in implementing the national curriculum, including the national curriculum for physical education. My right hon. Friend expects to begin to receive information about the standards achieved in relation to the national curriculum requirements, including safety skills, from the 1996–97 school year when these requirements come into force.

The Government have already supported with specific grant £900 million of local authority expenditure on the implementation of the national curriculum since 1989. It is up to schools and local education authorities to decide how to deploy their total resources in the light of local priorities and needs.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the Government's policy on the minimum number of students required for a viable sixth form.

Mr. Boswell: The number of students required for a sixth form to be viable will vary according to the circumstances of individual schools.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list for each local authority area in England and Wales the minimum, maximum and average numbers of students in sixth forms for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Boswell: Information on the size of sixth forms in maintained secondary schools in each local education authority in England is shown in the table. Information on schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the absenteeism rate for her Department in each year since 1991;

(2) what was the absenteeism rate for the Teachers Pensions Agency in each year since 1991.

Mr. Forth: The staff of the Teachers Pensions Agency are employed by the Department of Education and TPA absence rates are not collected separately.

The average number of working days lost due to sickness by DFE staff over the last three years is as follows:

1991	1992	1993
8.9 (days per staff year)	10	9.8

Nursery Education

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children under the age of five years were attending on a (a) full-time basis and (b) part-time basis (i) nursery classes, (ii) nursery schools or (iii) reception classes in primary schools on the latest date for which information is available

Mr. Forth: The number of full-time pupils under five being taught in maintained nursery and primary schools in England in January 1994 is shown in table.

	Full-time	Part-time
Nursery Schools	8,930	43,332
Primary Schools
Nursery Classes	27,292	267,039
Infant Classes	299,155	28,848

Student Loans Company Ltd.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she expects to receive the report of Coopers and Lybrand into alleged corruption within the Student Loans Company Ltd.; and if she will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received the provisional conclusions of Coopers and Lybrand's investigation into allegations of impropriety at the Student Loans Company. The investigation is nearing completion. Its full conclusions will be reported to the Committee of Public Accounts in the normal way.

Grant-Maintained Schools (Condition Survey)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which company won the contract for undertaking the forthcoming condition survey of grant-maintained schools; what is the price of the contract; and what criteria for standards of work on the survey were employed in assessing the tenders.

Mr. Robin Squire: These matters are now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENT

Dioxins and Furans

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the contribution of municipal waste incineration to the presence of dioxins and furans in the environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: So long as municipal waste incineration used older technologies and standards, it was a significant source of dioxins and furans. The Royal Commission on environmental pollution, in its 17th report "Incineration of Waste", Cm 2181, concurred with pollution paper 27, "Dioxins in the Environment", in estimating that in the 1970s and 1980s domestic waste incineration may have been contributing one fifth of the man made releases of dioxins and furans to the United Kingdom environment. In 1991, we introduced far stricter emission standards on incineration. This led the royal commission to conclude that the proportion of the dioxin and furan load attributable to municipal waste incineration would undergo substantial percentage reductions. The royal commission has recently confirmed its view that incinerators which meet present-day emission standards are environmentally acceptable. Further work is being done to assess the origins, scale and impacts of dioxin emissions; but the royal commission's conclusion should remain unaffected.

National Waste Strategy

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce details of the national waste strategy.

Mr. Atkins: We are aiming to issue a draft waste strategy for England and Wales for consultation later this month and to publish the final version of the strategy in the summer.

Business Rates

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the average business ratepayer paid in 1979, 1983, 1987, 1992 and in the latest available year in (a) actual and (b) real terms.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Average business rates per ratepayer prior to April 1990 cannot be compared with figures for later years. The following table gives the available information:

	Non-domestic rate yield England		Number of hereditaments at start of year[1] millions	Non-domestic rate yield per hereditament
	£ million	£ million 1993–94 prices		£	£ 1993–94 prices
1979–80	3,354	8,235	3.52	953	2,339
1983–84	6,042	10,198	3.57	1,692	2,857
1987–88	8,188	11,498	3.65	2,243	3,150
1992–93[2]	11,479	11,830	1.64	6,999	7,213
1994–95[2]	10,664	10,455	1.64	6,502	6,375

Notes:

[1] There were a number of changes to the definition of a non-domestic hereditament on 1 April 1990, when the uniform business rate was introduced; in particular, domestic garages outside the curtilage of the dwelling ceased to be treated as non-domestic properties. Figures for years prior to April 1990 are not therefore comparable with later years.

[2] Figure for yield are based on the estimated gross contribution to the non-domestic rates pool for 1992–93 and 1994–95 i.e before the allowance for the cost of collection and the City of London offset are netted off. They include an allowance for adjustments to the yield in respect of prior years, as a result of successful appeals decided in the year, and other changes in rateable values. The estimates do not include amounts contributed by central Government to compensate the non-domestic rates pool for loss of income resulting from changes to the transitional arrangements, as announced in recent budgets.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of projects approved under the single regeneration budget and the last five years' operation of the urban programme were for (a) economic, (b) social and (c) community projects.

Mr. Curry: Partnership bids approved under the first single regeneration budget bidding round, address a wide range of local needs and priorities, reflecting the objectives set out in paragraph 10 of the published bidding guidance, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Information is not held in the form requested; but I sent details of all the successful bids to the hon. Member on 5 December.

For the urban programme, the proportion of projects by category is as follows:

Year	Economic Per cent.	Environmental Per cent.	Social Per cent.	Housing Per cent.
1990–91	29	17	46	8
1991–92	33	23	44	—
1992–93	26	24	50	—
1993–94	33	27	40	—
1994–95 (provisional)	34	22	44	—

Notes:
"Housing" ceased to be a separate category in 1990–91; from 1991–92 most "housing" activity was recorded under "environmental".
Most "community" projects would have been classified as "social" and could be disaggregated only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra resources are available in the single regeneration budget following the ending of targeted programmes.

Mr. Curry: Targeted programmes have not ended. All existing commitments under the 20 programmes which now form part of the single regeneration budget continue to be honoured.

Following the first bidding round, £125 million is available for new SRB projects in 1995–96 and £225 million in both 1996–97 and 1997–98. A second bidding round, to be launched later this year, will build up to expenditure of £200 million in 1997–98, with £40 million available in 1996–97 for early funding of approved projects.

Total SRB expenditure over the next three years on current plans will be almost £4 billion, of which over £800 million will be available for new projects. The balance of resources—over £1 billion a year—will fund the commitments on existing programmes.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received suggesting that planning legislation should be amended to enable local authorities to require planning permission for houses in multiple occupation shared by six or fewer adults not of the same family; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: Few representations have been made for greater planning controls in this area. The present arrangements reflect that, in land use terms, the amenity of a neighbourhood is not much altered whether a house is occupied by a large family or by six unrelated adults living as a single household.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the amount of Government grant to each of the county councils in the seven-county south-west region, Oxfordshire, Hampshire and Kent, per head of population, for each of the financial years 1991–92, 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994-95; and what is his estimate for 1995–96.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The available information is shown in the tables below. Figures for revenue support grant per head of population are not comparable between years, because RSG is paid to compensate authorities for the difference between their standard spending assessment and the sum of redistributed non-domestic rates and council tax for standard spending. Note that for the community charge years—1991–92 and 1992–93—there are no figures for RSG to the counties because RSG was paid into the collection fund of the districts under the community charge system.

Note:
[1] Special and specific grants information for 1995–96 is not yet available.

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on his proposed notional amounts and adjustments to the capping criteria in 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We have received a large number of representations from authorities, including new information and revised data, which we are considering carefully. However, we have now reached preliminary views on all these representations, and we are informing authorities of our current proposals reflecting these preliminary conclusions. I am arranging for tables showing our current proposals to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Heppel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the levels of (a) local government expenditure and (b) total public expenditure have changed over the last five years in (i) actual and (ii) real terms.

Mr. Aitken: I have been asked to reply

The information requested is given in the table.

	Changes between 1988–89 and 1993–94 per cent.
	Actual	Real
General Government expenditure excluding privatisation proceeds:	+51	+15
of which local authorities:	+47	+12

There were some major changes in responsibility between 1988–89 and 1993–94. The main ones are the transfer of responsibility for sixth form colleges–higher education colleges from local authorities to central Government and the transfer of responsibility for community care from central Government to local authorities. If the local authority figures are adjusted to take account of these, the actual change would be 54 per cent. and the real change would be 17 per cent. for local authorities. Grant-maintained schools have been included as part of local authority spending.

Council Houses

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were completed by northern councils in each year since 1988; and what are the estimated totals for the next five years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Estimates of the total numbers of housebuilding completions for each local authority area in the northern region of England are shown in the publication "Local Housing Statistics". Figures are shown for the years indicated in table 1 of the following issues:

Year	Issue number	Table numbers
1988–90	103	1(d), 1(e) and 1(f)
1991	105	1(b)
1992	109	1(b)
1993–94[1]	110	1(b) and 1(a)[1]

[1] first quarter of 1994 only.

Estimates for the region as a whole are shown in the publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". Figures for 1988 to 1993 are in table 6.4(b) of the latest annual edition. Figures for the first nine months of 1994 are in table 1.3 of the quarterly edition, part 1, for the September quarter 1994. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

The Department does not forecast the number of new dwellings to be built by local authorities.

Waste Incinerators

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will remove the disparity of environmental standards imposing on clinical waste incinerators of differing sizes via his guidance notes PG5/1 and regulations IPR5/2.

Sir Paul Beresford: The different standards were set because of the different size and pollution potential of the incinerators coming under these two guidance notes. PG5/1 is currently under review and consideration is being given to raising the standards having regard to those in IPR5/2 concerning air pollution control. Most, if not all, clinical waste incinerators are likely to be subject to the EC hazardous waste incineration directive which was adopted last month.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue directives enforcing agencies to ensure that the deadline of 1 October set out in his guidance notes PG5/1 relating to clinical waste incinerators is enforced in a rigorous and timely manner.

Sir Paul Beresford: Local authorities are required by section 7(11) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to have regard to the guidance issued by the Secretary of State, which specifies a compliance deadline of 1 October 1995. There is no reason to believe that this guidance will not be followed. Failure to comply with an authorisation condition which requires higher air pollution standards after this date would be an offence and would render an incinerator operator liable to fines of up to £20,000 on summary conviction, and an unlimited fine and up to two years' imprisonment on conviction on indictment.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to local authorities on the role to be played by domestic waste incineration in waste disposal strategies.

Mr. Atkins: The Department is currently preparing a waste strategy for England and Wales. This will aim to provide a coherent framework for waste management policies throughout the country and will consider the use of domestic waste incineration and the role of local authorities in waste management. We are aiming to issue a draft for consultation later this month and to publish the final version of the strategy in the summer.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the absenteeism rate for Ordnance Survey in each year since 1991.

Sir Paul Beresford: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Ordnance Survey under its chief executive, Professor Rhind. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Rhind to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 16 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked me to reply to your Question about rates of absenteeism in Ordnance Survey.

The information you requested is contained in the table below. It has been supplied by the Occupational Health Service who have confirmed that similar information for 1994 is not yet available.

	1991	1992	1993
Average number of working days sick absence per head of staff	8.6	8.9	9.0
Percentage of working days lost due to sick absence	3.8	3.9	4.0

Please let me know if you require any additional information or clarification.

Orimulsion

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to require the introduction of gasification processes in any power plant licensed to burn orimulsion; what studies his Department has made of the environmental impact of the use of orimulsion to generate power; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In line with their statutory obligations under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will include in the authorisation for any individual plant such conditions as are needed to meet the objective of ensuring that the operator will use the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost for that plant to prevent or, where that is not practicable, to reduce to a minimum and to render harmless releases of prescribed substances, having regard to the best practicable environmental option for the environment as a whole.

Various studies on orimulsion have been conducted for the Department and for Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution. These have addressed such issues as: SO_2 emissions from orimulsion compared with heavy fuel oil or UK coal; emissions of particulates, vanadium and nickel and the production of acid smuts from the combustion of orimulsion; and the effects of spillage of orimulsion.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inspectors were employed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on 31 March of each year since 1990; and how many were engaged in work concerned with (a) waste disposal and (b) disposal of radioactive substances.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:

Number of inspectors in post as at:
31 March 1990	105
31 March 1991	115
31 March 1992	148
31 March 1993	170
31 March 1994	188

Under HMIP's integrated structure, work on waste disposal and disposal of radioactive substances is undertaken by staff working in multi-disciplinary teams where individuals address all aspects of the inspectorate's responsibilities for pollution regulation and control.

Radioactive Waste

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken in respect of the owner of the field at Poplar farm, Chelveston, Northamptonshire, in which drums of uranium 238 filings were found in mid-January.

Mr. Atkins: The legislation under which radioactive waste is controlled is the Radioactive Substance Act 1993. The question of possible enforcement action under this Act is a matter for the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. At this time, the matters are under investigation and any actions taken will depend on the outcome of these investigations.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a report from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the source of the drums of uranium 238 filings found recently at Poplar farm, Chelveston, Northamptonshire; if the carrier who took the drums from the point of production has been identified; whether the carrier was a registered carrier; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The scrap metal containing uranium found on land at Poplar farm, Caldecott, Northamptonshire is of unknown origin. Investigations are continuing to try and trace the source of the material and those involved in its movement.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the nature of the uranium recently discovered in Northampton; what action has been taken to protect the interests of local people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The scrap metal containing uranium found on land at Poplar farm, Caldecott, Northamptonshire consists of metal turnings commonly called swarf. It is believed to contain depleted uranium.

When this was discovered, HMIP informed the local police force and other relevant bodies. The local standing emergency plan was put into force. HMIP arranged for the scrap metal to be removed from the site; any remaining contamination will be removed shortly. Operations were managed so that the risk to the public was minimal. A 24-hour police presence was arranged to restrict access to the site by unauthorised persons. The United States air force authorities were consulted about the accommodation they use opposite the site.

A local health telephone help line was put in place so that residents or other members of the public could seek advice or monitoring.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations control the disposal of uranium by civil bodies; what consideration has been given to bringing these into line with regulations concerning disposal of uranium from military sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Disposal of radioactive waste is subject to regulation under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. Premises occupied by armed forces are exempt from the terms of the Act, although under arrangements agreed with the Ministry of Defence, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate control disposal from military sites as if the Act applied to those premises. The arrangements are kept under review.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what volume of (a) low-level, (b) medium-level and (c) high-level radioactive waste was produced in England and Wales in each year since 1990;

(2) what volume of (a) low-level, (b) medium-level and (c) high-level radioactive waste is expected to be produced in England and Wales in each year from 1995 to 2000.

Mr. Atkins: Information about radioactive waste produced in the UK can be found in the "The United Kingdom Radioactive Waste Inventory 1991", a copy of which is held in the Library of the House. A 1994 edition of the inventory is currently in preparation.

Sustainable Development

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the first meeting of the United Kingdom round table on sustainable development is to be held; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The inaugural meeting of the round table will be held on Monday 23 January. Professor Sir Richard Southwood and I will be co-chairmen.

This is a major new body with a vital role in driving forward environmentally sustainable development. It will have the following objectives:

to help identify the agenda and priorities for sustainable development;

to develop new areas of consensus on difficult issues of sustainable development and where this is not possible, to clarify and reduce difference; to provide advice and recommendations on actions to achieve sustainable development; to help evaluate progress towards objectives; and to inform and involve others, building wider support for emerging consensus.

A copy of my letter of invitation to members has been placed in the House Library. A list of members will be placed in the Library shortly.

Site Rebate Scheme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the cost of the site rebate scheme in 1966 and the cost of the council tax rebate in the current year.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities in England and Wales were paid £22,350,000 in rating relief in 1966–67. The cost of council tax benefit is currently estimated to be £2,011 million for 1994–95.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between his departmental Ministers and agencies.

Mr. Lang: Information about the respective roles and responsibilities of the Secretary of State and the agency chief executive is set out in the framework document for each individual executive agency. Copies of framework documents for all eight of my executive agencies were placed in the Library of the House when each agency was launched or following a triennial review of the agency, where this has taken place.

Asylum Seekers

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 29 November 1994 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) Official Report, columns 691-92, if his intention not to change how refugees are treated with regard to charges for further education extends to those seeking asylum.

Mr. Lang: As I explained in my answer to the right hon. Member on 9 December 1994, Official Report, column 350, the position of those seeking asylum is currently part of the consultations to which I referred in that answer.

Flooding

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what extra finance he is making available to the local authorities who have been affected by the recent floodings in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The extra financial assistance from the Government to the local authorities affected by last month's severe flooding in Strathclyde takes a variety of forms.

First, the Bellwin scheme of emergency financial assistance to local authorities has been activated as regards the whole of Strathclyde region. It is therefore open to all authorities within Strathclyde to submit claims for grant under the scheme. No formal claims have yet been received, as again the local authorities are still assessing their costs. Authorities have until 31 May 1995 to submit their claims. It is therefore too early to estimate what the final amounts of any Bellwin grant payable as a result of the flooding might be.

Secondly, a supplementary housing capital allocation of £100,000 was made to Renfrew district council in respect of the cost of re-housing persons made homeless by the flooding and carrying out repairs to council housing stock. I also announced that a further £150,000 was being made available to meet further capital housing requirements in the current financial year for any of the district councils in the affected area: as yet no request has been received for any part of these additional resources.

Thirdly, supplementary non-housing capital allocations totalling £1.365 million was made to Strathclyde regional council for 1994–95. These related to a variety of services, primarily roads and transport and water and sewerage, and met in full the request for additional capital resources made by the regional council. We have advised the district councils affected that we will consider sympathetically, so far as available resources allow, any requests from them for additional non-housing capital allocations for the current financial year. So far no such requests have been received.

Finally, we have made it clear to the local authorities concerned that we will take into account when setting both housing and non-housing capital allocations for 1995–96 any reasonable requests from them for additional resources arising from the flooding. Again no such requests have yet been received, as I understand that the authorities concerned are still assessing the costs to them of the flooding.

We continue to be in close touch with the local authorities and will respond to any requests from them as quickly as possible.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the size of the shipbuilding industry in Scotland in 1979; and what its size is now.

Mr. Stewart: In 1979, the shipbuilding industry in Scotland employed about 18,800 people in 12 shipyards, excluding ship repair and boat building yards. In 1994, the industry employed 5,200 people in five shipyards, again excluding ship repair and boat building.

Training in Scotland

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the allocation of the budgets for Training in Scotland from 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Stewart: In 1994–95, a total of £210.063 million was allocated to Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to fund their respective training programmes. The planning figure for 1995–96, which includes provision for the package of training measures announced last year in the White Paper on Competitiveness, is £212.213 million: this figure is subject to parliamentary approval of the estimates. A breakdown of the allocations is as follows:

£ millions

	1994–95		1995–96 (plans)
	Scottish Enterprise	Highlands and Islands Enterprise	Scottish Enterprise	Highlands and Islands Enterprise
Youth training	87.0	6.451	91.386	6.731
Adult training/training for work	88.431	5.302	79.328	4.925
Enterprise training/training and education support	21.183	1.696	27.740	2.103

Councillors' Allowances

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the outcome of the recent consultation exercise on councillors' allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: A total of around 50 responses were received to the consultation paper. In the light of these comments, my right hon. Friend has decided to bring forward amending regulations which will apply to the shadow and islands councils from April 1995 onwards. The new system will recognise the workload that councillors will have to undertake after reorganisation and will allow local authorities greater flexibility. The draft regulations will:

provide a Scottish quantum of around £7 million for the payment of basic allowance to all councillors; this may include a discretionary attendance allowance scheme of up to 25 per cent. of each council's share of the quantum; require the Scottish quantum to be distributed on the basis of population within each of the new council areas in three bandwidths. Details of the three bandwidths and the amount each authority will use to calculate its share of the quantum for basic/attendance allowance are given below. The sum available for each council is calculated by multiplying the figures given by the number of councillors.

leave decisions on the payment of special responsibility allowance at the discretion of councils themselves, who will have to balance their priorities and needs in determining payments. The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has indicated its willingness to issue guidance on the level of special responsibility allowances which might be paid; require that where special responsibility allowance is paid councils will, as at present, pay the allowance to at least one member of an opposition group.

require councils to publish details of their allowances scheme and to publish an annual report of payments made to individual councillors.

My right hon. Friend will consult local authority interests on the draft regulations with the intention that the new system will be in place for the shadow and islands councils in April 1995. The present arrangements for the payment of councillors' allowances will remain in place for the existing mainland councils until the new councils take over in April 1996.

A circular to local authorities giving details of the new rates which will be effective from 1 April 1994 will be issued in due course.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been received in management allowances by each general practitioner fundholding practice for each financial year since its establishment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1995]: The information requested is not available centrally. The monitoring of individual fundholder's management allowances is the responsibility of individual health boards as part of their role in monitoring the overall performance of fundholders in management of their fund. The allowance has a maximum level—£35,000 for 1994–95 which no practice can exceed.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures are being taken in each health board area in Scotland to promote general practitioner fundholding; how many general practitioner fundholding practices are currently operating within each health board area; and how much it has cost for each health board to promote this policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1995]: The information requested on current numbers of operational GP fundholding practices is as set out in the table. Each health board is responsible for the promotion of GP fundholding in its area and decides its own measures to promote the scheme. The expenditure incurred is largely indirect costs which are not separately identifiable within overall health board expenditure.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the general practitioner fundholders currently operating in Scotland, for each health board area, and the dates when these practices were established.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1995]: According to the latest information provided by health boards there are currently 107 operational fundholders in Scotland. As listing all with dates of establishment would be rather lengthy I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent on management allowances for general practitioner fundholders for each health board area during the financial year 1993–94; and how much the Scottish Office estimates will be spent on general practitioner fundholder allowances during the financial year 1994–95.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1995]: The information requested is given in the table. GP fundholding has delivered many improvements in quality of care for patients. The costs of the management allowance—at about 2 per cent. of budgets set represents excellent value for money.

The estimated expenditure for 1994–95 is based on health board forecasts. GP practices can be approved for entry to the fundholding scheme at any point during the year and therefore the estimate of expenditure for 1994–95 may underestimate actual expenditure.

1. The expenditure includes both revenue and capital components.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment the Scottish Office has made of the impact of general practitioner fundholding on patient care.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1995]: The Scottish Office has provided funding for an independent evaluation of the impact of GP fundholding on patient care.

This evaluation is currently being carried out by a team led by Professor John Howie from the department of general practice at Edinburgh university. The final report is due for publication during 1995.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what target has been set by the Scottish Office for the number of general practitioner fundholding practices for each health board area in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has not specifically set a target number of general practitioner fundholding practices for each health board area in Scotland. However, all health boards other than Orkney, Shetland and Western Isles have agreed with the NHS Management Executive an objective of achieving at least 30 per cent. coverage of the population by 1995–96.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 January 1995]: Five members of staff have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993.

All these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Private Patients

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many in-patient and out-patient private patients were treated in NHS hospitals; and what was the total income earned from private patients in each of the last five years, and by health board area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The figures in the tables have been taken from health board annual accounts and from 1992–93 a combination of health board and NHS trust annual accounts. The figures for 1993–94 are provisional.

The number of in-patient and out-patient private patients treated in NHS hospitals for the years 1991–92 to 1993–94 is set out in table 1. The figures for 1989–90 and 1990–91 are not available centrally.

The income earned from private patients in each of the last five years by health board area is set out in table 2. The figure for Greater Glasgow in 1993–94 includes overseas patients, and can therefore not be compared directly with those for earlier years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Armley Prison

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners at HM prison, Armley have been on suicide watch for each month since January 1991;

(2) how many complaints have been received at HM prison, Armley from solicitors and probation officers in each year since 1990; and if he will list the nature of them;

(3) what is the number of prison officers at HM prison, Armley as a percentage of the officially assessed establishment figure;

(4) how many prisoners at HM prison, Armley have been (a) held in Armley for each year to date since 1989, (b) held on remand for each year to date since 1989, (c) detained for non payment of fines for each year to date since 1989 and (d) transferred from HM prison, Everthorpe subsequent to the recent disturbances there; how many prisoners there are detained three to a cell; when all the new wings will be fully operational; and if he will make a statement;

(5) how many staff were employed at HM prison, Armley (a) in administration, (b) as prison officers and (c) educational staff for each year to date from 1989;

(6) how many prisoners in HM prison, Armley have unsupervised access to a telephone;

(7) for how many hours per (a) day and (b) week prisoners at HM prison, Armley are detained in their cells.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Philippa Drew to Mr. John Battle, dated 19 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about Leeds prison.

The decision to keep a prisoner on special watch because of the risk of suicide or self harm is noted on the individual prisoner medical records and the computerised local inmate database system, which is updated daily. No central statistical records are kept.

The governor of Leeds and the area manager receive a number of enquiries from solicitors and probation staff on a wide variety of matters. Common subjects include sentence calculation, court production and personal injury claims. Copies of such correspondence are kept with the prisoners' individual records, and again no central records are maintained.

The budgeted number of prison officer grades for Leeds is 360. Staffing levels are being reviewed at Leeds to determine the required staffing level for the work being undertaken. There are 361 officer grades employed in discipline duties at Leeds.

The average daily population at Leeds prison in the years 1989 to date was as follows:

	All prisoners	Remand prisoners	Fine defaulters
1989	1,244	626	16
1990	1,064	487	14
1991	929	457	17
1992	881	390	20
1993	927	445	20
1994[1]	1,073	458	18

[1] 1994 figures are for January–November.

Forty eight prisoners were transferred to Leeds from Everthorpe prison after the recent disturbance.

The new accommodation at Leeds (E and F wings) is fully operational. "A" wing has been closed for refurbishment. No prisoners are held three to a cell designed for one prisoner.

The information on staff employed at the prison is as follows:

	Administration grades	Officer grades (including specialists)	Education staff (full-time)
1989	48	321	7
1990	48	318	7
1991	50.5	332	7.5
1992	50.5	363	6.5
1993	58	428	[1]6
1994	58.5	434	[1]6

[1] Full-time staff contracted from Manchester College since August 1993.

The figures for education staff do not include teaching staff employed on a sessional basis, whose number varies throughout the academic year. The present contract allows for the services of up to 14 part-time teachers to be used.

On average prisoners in Leeds spend 17 hours per day (119 hours per week) in their cells. The minimum time out of cell for any prisoner is three hours, the maximum twelve hours. The governor aims to increase the amount of time prisoners can spend out of their cells by restructuring shift working practices. In the longer term, a new education block and workshops are planned to provide more activity places.

No prisoners at Leeds have unsupervised access to a cardphone. All calls are recorded and may be remotely monitored by staff.

Policing, Shoreham

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the cost of policing at Shoreham harbour in West Sussex.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Sussex as to the cost of policing the demonstrations against the export of live calves at Shoreham harbour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I understand that the latest estimate of the costs of policing the demonstrations against animal shipments at Shoreham is £1.9 million. Fifty-one per cent. of all expenditure incurred by Sussex police in 1994–95 will be met by Home Office grant.

The force should look first to its county councils for any extra cash needed. The force budget for the current financial year is some £4 million below its standard spending assessment. Making up that shortfall would attract a further £4 million in Home Office grant, and would give the force increased resources of £8 million in all. This would more than cover the reported costs of the Shoreham demonstrations.

The Government have played its part in ensuring that the Sussex police force is adequately funded. Our current proposals will enable Sussex to spend next year up to £18 million, or 14 per cent., more than it planned to spend in 1994–95.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his current estimate of the total overtime payments made to police officers involved in policing the protests at Shoreham;

(2) what has been the total cost to date of the police presence at Shoreham in connection with calf exports.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I have given today to a question from the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen).

Overtime payments made to police officers involved in policing the demonstrations could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between his departmental Ministers and agencies.

Mr. Howard: The relative responsibilities of Ministers and chief executives of Home Office executive agencies are set out in the framework documents of those agencies, copies of them are available in the Library.

Prison Catering

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for (a) Doncaster, (b) Lindholme, (c) Wolds, (d) Wakefield, (e) Durham women's wing and (f) New Hall, Wakefield prisons the organisations providing catering; and what are the per capita costs of catering for each establishment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Philippa Drew to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the cost of providing catering services to Doncaster, Lindholme, Wolds, Wakefield, Durham and New Hall prisons.

For Wolds and Doncaster, I would refer you to Tony Butler's reply to your earlier Question about the cost of food at privately managed prisons (Hansard 17 February 1994, column 797).

At Lindholme, Wakefield, Durham and New Hall, the catering is provided by Prison Service staff. The costs per inmate day for each establishment are:

	Staff Costs £	Food Costs £
Lindholme	1.05	1.36
Wakefield	1.10	1.36
Durham	1.08	1.36
New Hall	1.20	1.38

Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for (a) Doncaster, (b) Lindholme, (c) Wolds, (d) Wakefield, (e) Durham women's wing and (f) New Hall, Wakefield prisons, the average number of hours per week which prisoners spend in structured activities for each of the last six months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Philippa Drew to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 19 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the average number of hours per week which prisoners have spent in structured activities during the last six months at Doncaster, Lindholme, Wolds, Wakefield, Durham women's wing and New Hall prisons.

The information requested is given in the following table:

Activity hours per prisoner per week

	July	August	September	October	November	December
Durham	20.2	18.1	23.8	25.5	25.0	25.2

Algeria

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to prevent funds being collected in Britain to fund terrorist movements in Algeria.

Mr. Howard: I take very seriously any suggestion that foreign terrorist groups are receiving support from within this country and accordingly I ensure that the police and the Security Service have the resources and powers that they need to counter effectively any attempts to raise money here to fund terrorist attacks abroad. Any relevant information which comes to the attention of these services is thoroughly investigated, with a view to action under the criminal law, including the prevention of terrorism legislation, or under the Immigration Act 1971.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each of his Department's executive agencies, the names of those people whose appointments he has approved that have served in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Royal Navy; and what service rank they last held.

Mr. Howard: None.

Prison Staff, Pentonville

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department will be pursuing disciplinary proceedings against the prison staff involved in restraining Omasase Lumumba in Pentonville prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison

Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 19 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about disciplinary action against the prison staff involved in restraining Mr Omasase Lumumba in Pentonville prison.

A full internal Prison Service investigation into the death of Mr Lumumba concluded that there was no evidence to justify disciplinary action against any individual officer. That remains the position.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths occurred in Doncaster prison in 1994; and how many were suicides.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 19 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Doncaster prison.

Since it opened on 20 June 1994, two prisoners have died in the prison. Of these one death (that of Ian Buck) has been officially recorded as a suicide. The other (that of Shaun Webster) has still to be determined by an inquest jury.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of each suicide at Doncaster prison in 1994, what was (a) the time the suicide occurred, (b) the prison wing, (c) the number of prisoners on that wing and (d) the number of staff on that wing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 19 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Doncaster prison.

The only official verdict of suicide at Doncaster has been that of Ian Buck. He was discovered in his cell at 8.02am on 16 September on Unit B of houseblock 2. The number of prisoners unlocked on the unit that morning was 44 and there were 11 staff on duty.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the numbers of staff and number of inmates at Doncaster prison, including those on home leave, on 1 January 1995; how many deaths of inmates held in the prison have taken place since 20 June 1994; and how many prisoners have required immediate hospital admission since 20 June 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 January 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 19 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Doncaster prison.

There were 410 full time and 34 part time staff employed at Doncaster on 1 January 1995. The total inmate population at midnight on 1 January was 723. There were no prisoners on home leave at that time.

Two inmates have died within the prison and one has died in St James' hospital, Leeds. Since 20 January 1994, twelve prisoners have required immediate hospital admission needing an overnight stay. The reasons for admission include acts of deliberate self-harm, drug-related incidents and assaults by other prisoners, as well as sudden illness.

Carl Bridgewater Case

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the Merseyside police commenced their inquiry into the Carl Bridgewater case; and on what date it was completed.

Mr. Maclean: Merseyside police began the current inquiry in February 1994. I understand that they are making every effort to complete it as quickly as possible.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to which of the requests for disclosure received by the Home Secretary from representatives of the four men convicted of killing Carl Bridgewater, following the High Court judgment of 28 November, he has yet to respond; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The expert reports and records of interviews with police witnesses, which the divisional court said specifically should be disclosed, have been made available to the representatives of the convicted men. We are considering what further disclosure is now required in this case in accordance with the court's judgment.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum applicants have been removed to (a) Italy, (b) the Netherlands, (c) Belgium, (d) Germany and (e) France, following refusal of their application on safe third country grounds, since the implementation of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act on 26 July 1993; and how many of those so removed have been returned to the United Kingdom by the authorities of the country concerned;

(2) how many asylum applicants, excluding dependants were removed from the United Kingdom following refusal of their application on safe third country grounds in 1993; and if he will provide a breakdown of those so removed, by nationality grounds and by country to which they were removed.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on the number of removals of asylum seekers whose applications were refused on safe third country grounds, by nationality, for 1993 is given in the table.

Information on the destination of persons removed after having their application for asylum refused on safe third country grounds and the number of those who were returned by the country removed to could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum in the United Kingdom were refused on safe third country grounds in 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: In 1994, 865 applications for asylum were refused on safe third country grounds.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide a breakdown of current costs to his Department associated with removing from the United Kingdom persons refused asylum on safe third country grounds;

(2) what was the total cost to his Department in the financial year 1993–94 of removing from the United Kingdom persons refused asylum on safe third country grounds.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Staff costs relating to removing people refused asylum on safe third country grounds are not recorded separately, and details of escort, detention and removal costs relating to such cases are not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the available information suggests that in the majority of cases in which people were removed to safe third countries in the financial year 1993–94, the directions for removal would have been given to the inward carrier, who would have been responsible for the costs of escort and detention and for the removal itself.

Police Budget, Merseyside

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the chief constable of Merseyside on the police budget.

Mr. Maclean: The budget for the Merseyside police is a matter for the Merseyside police authority.

My right hon. and learned Friend received a letter on 29 September from the chief constable of Merseyside, Mr. Sharples, on the subject of the new police funding formula for 1995–96. Mr. Sharples was a member of the delegation from Merseyside which met my right hon. and learned Friend on 14 December 1994 to discuss the proposals, announced on 1 December 1994, for the funding to be available for policing on Merseyside in 1995–96.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amounts have been requested by way of section 11 spending in 1995–96 by each local education authority; and what has been the total amount requested in England.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Most existing projects which will still be running in 1995–96 relate to education. It is hoped to notify local authorities shortly of their grant allocations for 1995–96 expenditure in relation to those projects. In addition, the authorities listed in the table have requested for 1995–96 the amounts of grant shown in respect of new education projects.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many illegal immigrants have been apprehended during the past year; and how many have been sent back to their home country;

(2) how many known illegal immigrants there are in the United Kingdom; and what measures he is taking to apprehend them.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: When a person is known to be here unlawfully, firm action is taken by the immigration service in cooperation with the police and other agencies. It is not possible to give the total number of immigrants who are here unlawfully. The available information relates to those who have been detected and served with a notice of illegal entry or a notice of intention to deport.

In 1994, 7,240 illegal entrants were detected. In the same period, 3,670 were removed, or departed voluntarily, from the United Kingdom. In addition, 4,750 persons were issued with a notice of intention to deport because of a breach of conditions of leave to enter or remain, and 1,080 such persons were removed, or departed voluntarily, from the United Kingdom in 1994.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been granted asylum during the past year from (a) non-Commonwealth and (b) Commonwealth countries.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The provisional information is that in 1994, 825 asylum applicants were recognised as refugees and granted asylum. Of this figure, 45 were from Commonwealth countries.

Parkhurst Prison

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) at what date in October 1994 he received a copy of the letter from the Chief Inspector of Prisons to the Director General of the Prison Service concerning security at Her Majesty's prison, Parkhurst; and if he will place a copy of the letter in the Library;

(2) what action he took following receipt of the copy of the Chief Inspector of Prisons' letter to the Director General of the Prison Service concerning security of Her Majesty's prison, Parkhurst; on how many occasions he wrote to the director general concerning security at Her Majesty's prison Parkhurst and on what dates; and what steps he instructed the director general to take.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 10 January 1995]: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, Judge Stephen Tumim, wrote to the Director General of the Prison Service, Derek Lewis, on 7 October 1994. His letter set out some concerns about security at Parkhurst expressed by an inspection team. As I announced in my statement of 10 January 1995, Official Report, columns 31–46, I have placed a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

A copy of the letter was received in my office on Friday 7 October 1994. I spoke to the director general on the same day and again that weekend and asked for a full report. I received that report on 11 October 1994. On the basis of advice from the governor of Parkhurst, the director general advised me that all Judge Tumim's recommendations had been implemented.

My office wrote to the director general on 14 October 1994 to ask for further details on the use of the X-ray machine in the prison's gatelodge and on plans to search all staff coming on duty. The director general replied to my office on 21 October 1994, again informing me that procedures had been changed to address Judge Tumim's criticism.

Prisons (Satellite Television)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all prisons that have satellite television installed in (a) cells and (b) communal areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 January 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 19 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about satellite television in Prison Service establishments.

Two establishments in England and Wales have the capacity for prisoners to watch satellite television in cells and 105 establishments have the capacity for prisoners to watch satellite television in communal areas.

Television viewing equipment—including satellite television—is not paid for by taxpayers' money but from an establishment's general purpose fund which is largely derived from prisoners' own contributions.

A list of these establishments which use satellite television in cells or communal areas is attached. A copy of this list has been placed in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Defence Procurement Agency

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many public service jobs have been created by the establishment of the Defence Procurement Agency to be located in Bristol

Mr. Freeman: On present plans, the Procurement Executive will relocate to north Bristol between autumn 1995 and autumn 1996. We expect between 500 and 600 local public service jobs to be created over this period.

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the division of responsibilities and relationship between his departmental Ministers and agencies.

Mr. Freeman: For each agency, the position is as set out in the framework document for that agency, a copy of which is placed in the Library of the House at the time of launch.

Used Reactor Cores

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location of each of the used reactor cores from his Department's nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Freeman: Used reactor cores that have been removed from my Department's nuclear-powered submarines are held at the following locations:

Site	Current holding of used reactor cores
BNFL Sellafield	38.5
Devonport Royal Dockyard	3.0
Rosyth Royal Dockyard	2.5
Naval Reactor Test Establishment, Dounreay	1.0

Procurement and Maintenance Contracts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what files his Department currently holds regarding (i) brokerage fees, (ii) agency fees and (iii) commissions with regard to procurement and maintenance contracts.

Mr. Freeman: Individual branches within the Department maintain files appropriate to their business needs. The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Naval Procurement

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the naval procurement programme for 1995 to 1997.

Mr. Freeman: The naval procurement programme includes the continuation of the Trident programmes, a helicopter carrier, EH101 Merlin ASW helicopters, further type 23 frigates, Sandown class single role minehunters, and Sea Harrier F/A2s, the upgrading of Lynx mark 3 helicopters to mark 8 standard and the purchase of Spearfish torpedoes. We also remain fully involved in the common new generation frigate programme, Project Horizon. In addition, we have issued invitations to tender for replacement LPDs, batch 2 Trafalgar class submarines, an oceanographic survey vessel and another batch of type 23 frigates.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards ensuring competition in naval procurement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie) on 22 November 1994, Official Report column 134.

Auxiliary Oiler Replenishment Vessels

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost to the Exchequer including subsidy and post-acceptance refit costs, of (a) AOR1 and (b) AOR2.

Mr. Freeman: The total cost to the end of December 1994 to my Department, including post-acceptance rectification work, is £131.130 million and £159.460 million (actual prices) for AOR 01 and AOR 02 respectively. Final costs for both vessels have still to be agreed. An independent assessment of Harland and Wolff's bid for AOR 01 concluded that the bid contained no element of subsidy. Neither was there any element of subsidy in Swan Hunter's bid for AOR 02. The Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development made payments of £53 million to Harland and Wolff as part of the yard's privatisation. These payments were tied to progress in completing AOR 01.

Military Equipment

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what military needs three rough terrain wheeled tractors are required as set out in the future purchase No. EM and D1A/152; what consideration has been given to leasing the equipment; what information he has as to the availability of such equipment on the civil market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The three rough terrain wheeled tractors in future purchase No. EM and D1A/152 will be deployed in the Falkland Islands and used for the handling and movement of International Standards Organisation containers on semi-trailers. Vehicles that meet the military specification for this requirement are not currently available for leasing or immediate purchase on the civil market.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what military needs it was decided that 13 rough terrain container handlers were required; what consideration was given to leasing the equipment; what information he has as to the availability of such equipment on the civil market; why the tender has been cancelled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Rough terrain container handlers are used to handle International Standards Organisation containers on operations and during major exercises in the field. Vehicles that meet the military specification of this requirement are not currently available for leasing or immediate purchase on the civil market. The tender has been delayed to modify the specification and broaden the scope of potential bidders; it will be reissued.

Service Accommodation

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average rent per week in service married quarters; and what was the average rent in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 17 January 1995]: The average rents for Service married quarters owned by my Department are given below. These figures are based on furnished accommodation in England and represent the most commonly occupied quarters.

Married quarters charge for last five years

	1990–91 £	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £	1994–95 £
Officers	32.65	37.17	40.67	41.30	43.12
Other ranks	20.91	23.87	26.04	26.46	27.74

Additionally, most personnel pay a contribution in lieu of council tax.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many lone parents there are living in accommodation owned by his Ministry.

Mr. Soames: As at 16 January 1995 there were 647 lone parents in married quarter accommodation owned by my Department. Lone parents are defined as widows or widowers, divorced, separated or unmarried personnel who have parental responsibility for a child or children within the terms of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of his Department's houses and their estimated total value in each of the districts and boroughs of Wales and in Wales as a whole.

Mr. Soames: Although we maintain no record by district and borough, as at 30 September, my Department owned the following housing properties in each county in Wales:

	Service married quarters	MOD civilian houses	Former married quarters in the process of sale	Former civilian houses in the process of sale	Total
Clwyd	292	0	0	0	292
Dyfed	451	25	26	1	503
Gwent	175	0	15	0	190
Gwynedd	391	0	0	0	391
Mid Glamorgan	6	0	0	0	6
Powys	205	0	0	0	205
South Glamorgan	965	0	0	0	965
West Glamorgan	16	0	1	0	17
Total	2,501	25	42	1	2,569

The married quarter returns are reported by service unit based on the unit's location, and some of the properties may therefore be located in a neighbouring county. The information requested on valuations is not available.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's houses remain vacant in each of the districts and boroughs of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Although we maintain no record by district and borough, as at 30 September, my Department owned the following vacant housing properties in each county in Wales:

	Service married quarters	MOD civilian houses	Former married quarters in the process of sale	Total
Clwyd	81	0	0	81
Dyfed	56	8	26	90
Gwent	107	0	15	122
Gwynedd	16	0	0	16
Powys	20	0	0	20
South Glamorgan	33	0	0	33
West Glamorgan	4	0	1	5
Total	317	8	42	367

The married quarter returns are reported by service unit based on the unit's location, and some of the properties may therefore be located in a neighbouring county.

A large number of the vacant service married quarters were undergoing or awaiting major maintenance, held for future deployments or formed part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available for entitled service families.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the improvement and development of his Department's houses in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 17 November 1994, Official Report, column 1, to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw). My Department's plans for improving the quality and management of our married quarter estates include our properties in Wales.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds his Department has not pursued its plans to establish a housing trust for the sale of the married quarters estate.

Mr. Soames: The problems surrounding the Housing Trust, as originally conceived, related to its classification as a private sector body. As my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence, announced on 17 November 1994, Official Report, column 1, we are proceeding instead with the creation of a Defence Housing Executive, thus building on the efforts and resources invested in the trust proposal.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to date for management consultants and merchant bankers who have advised on his Department's plans for the future of the married quarters estate.

Mr. Soames: The total value of invoices presented to date by management and other consultants and merchant banks assisting in developing the Department's plans for the future of the married quarters estate is some £3,300,000 exclusive of VAT. The work undertaken in developing the Housing Trust proposals will form the basis for the creation of the Defence Housing Executive as announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 17 November 1994, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Paul Martin

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Mr. Paul Martin has yet return to his post since he was suspended from work for the Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. Mr. Martin has tendered his resignation from the Ministry of Defence.

Military Museums

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those military museums that currently have fewer than 15,000 visitors a year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A list of the military museums which have fewer than 15,000 visitors per year, based on the most recent figures available, is as follows.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total financial cost of the United Kingdom's commitment to the Falkland Islands since 1979.

Mr. Soames: The cost of the Falklands commitment to Defence Votes between 1982–83 and 1993–94 was some £3.7 billion at outturn prices, equivalent to £6.0 billion at 1993–94 prices. This covers the estimated costs of maintaining the Falkland Islands garrison as well as campaign costs and the replacement, where appropriate, of equipment and stores lost or consumed during the campaign. Costs other than defence costs, and costs prior to 1982–83, are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Gulf War

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the most recently revised estimate of the financial cost to the United Kingdom of the Gulf war.

Mr. Soames: The current estimate of the additional military cost of the Gulf conflict is £2,489,000,000, spread over several years. As part of its normal insurance business, the Export Credits Guarantee Department has paid £658,000,000 of claims arising from the situation in the Gulf in 1990–91 and which have yet to be recovered. Other Departments incurred minor costs in respect of the conflict.

The bulk of these costs have been offset by the generous cash contributions from the other Governments totalling £2,049,000,000.

Aircraft Statistics

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present number of (a) helicopters and (b) fixed-wing aircraft in each of the services.

Mr. Soames: The details requested are as follows:

Service	Aircraft	Number
Royal Navy	Helicopter	155
	fixed wing	48
Army	Helicopter	302
	fixed wing	28
Royal Air Force	Helicopter	173
	fixed wing	939

[1] Including those Chinook undergoing mid-life update.

Property Management Costs

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the £400,000 property management costs mentioned in the C31 consultation document of the defence costs study.

Mr. Soames: The property management costs of option A referred to in the consultation document are estimated to be £534,000 per annum in the longer term. Some £400,000 of this relates to the costs associated with the workforce that is contracted to undertake planned and routine maintenance tasks at Pitreavie. In addition, the estimate includes an amount—approximately £100,000—for average annual expenditure on unplanned maintenance tasks at Pitreavie which is derived from historical data. The remainder represents property management expenditure at Faslane.

Ministerial Visit (Liverpool)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Minister of State for Defence Procurement's visit to Liverpool at the Defence Accounts Agency on Monday 16 January.

Mr. Freeman: I took the opportunity to acknowledge the efficiency measures already implemented by the in-house team in preparation for the aware of a three-year service level agreement covering the work of the Directorate of Accounts (Bills) on behalf of the MOD.

National Service

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will propose the striking of a medal or other certification to recognise the contribution made by men and women who undertook national service.

Mr. Soames: We have no plans to institute a medal or certificate specifically for those who served a period of national service in the armed forces. National service men were, however, eligible for the range of official awards approved by the sovereign at the time.

Inhumane Weapons

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the inhumane weapons convention to be ratified.

Mr. Soames: We expect to ratify the UN weaponry convention by the end of February 1995, and in time to participate as a full state party in the forthcoming review conference.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to support an amendment to the inhumane weapons convention to prohibit the military use of lasers to blind combatants on the battlefield.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom is looking positively at proposals to add to the UN weaponry convention a new protocol covering the use of lasers to blind.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy in respect of the inhumane weapons review conference in September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom is working positively towards strengthening the UN weaponry convention at the forthcoming review conference.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the British armed forces possess lasers designed to blind combatants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom armed forces do not possess and currently have no plans to develop or procure any laser weapon designed permanently to blind enemy troops or to disrupt their eyesight temporarily. We are, however, researching the technology associated with laser weapons in order to develop effective defences against such weapons should they be deployed against our armed forces.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Britain has (a) considered and (b) tested lasers designed to blind combatants.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom maintains an interest in all developments in laser technologies, including those related to laser weapons. A major objective of the Department's laser research programme is to understand the nature of the threat which might be posed by the deployment and use of laser weapons against UK forces and, if necessary, to develop appropriate protective countermeasures. The UK has no plans to develop or test a laser weapon designed permanently to blind human targets. The feasibility of making use of temporary dazzle effects was investigated in 1983 and tests on one system were conducted which were subsequently discontinued.

Golf Courses

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many golf courses are sited on land owned by his Department;

(2) what has been the total cost in each of the past five years of the upkeep of golf courses sited on land owned by his Department.

Mr. Soames: My noble friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Weapons Sales

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of his Department on the sale of weapons that can be used for torture to countries with poor human rights records.

Mr. Freeman: It is my Department's policy to ensure that all relevant human rights considerations are taken into account when applications are made to promote and supply licensable defence equipment overseas. It is Her Majesty's Government's policy to avoid the transfer of such equipment which would be likely to be used to violate human rights. Advice on this matter is normally provided by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Army Finance and Audit Office

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of the Army finance and audit office.

Mr. Soames: As part of Front Line First, proposals to devolve the functions of the army finance and audit office, currently based at Ashton under Lyne, down to unit level were detailed in a consultation document issued on 21 July 1994.

During the consultation period, understandable local concerns were expressed both about the loss of jobs in Ashton under Lyne and the weakening of Greater Manchester's long and proud links with the army. Points were also raised about the detailed costings used, and the effectiveness of the proposed alternative auditing arrangements but no new significant defence-related arguments have emerged. Having given careful consideration to these points, I am satisfied that the proposal to close AFAO is sound on both management and financial grounds, and I have decided that it will close on 31 March 1996, whereupon the audit task will be devolved to unit level. We will, of course, continue to consult the trade unions about the detailed implementation of these measures.

Army Storage Facilities

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to rationalise army storage facilities following the defence costs study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: As part of Front Line First, proposals to rationalise army storage facilities were detailed in a consultation document issued on 19 August 1994. A total of 35 responses have been received from trade unions, local authorities and other interested parties; all have been subject to the most careful and detailed consideration. Understandable local concerns were expressed on the effect on employment and the local community. No significant new defence-related arguments have however emerged, nor have any new suggestions been made which might cause us to alter our original proposals, which flow from a reduction in the army's storage requirements.

I therefore have to announce that we shall now move to implement our plans to supply the army from a smaller number of larger, more efficiently utilised sites, supported by a new distribution network utilised sites, supported by a new distribution network utilising best practice from industry. I am confident these changes can be introduced without detriment to operational capability.

Our proposals will mean the closure of 13 army static logistic support and engineer support units. The ordnance support unit Liphook will close by 31 March 1995, and the following by 31 March 1996:

- Regional depot Hereford
- Regional depot Stirling
- Ordnance support unit Ashford
- Ordnance support unit Bicester
- Ordnance support unit Burscough
- Ordnance support unit Feltham
- Ordnance support unit Thetford
- Ordnance support unit Weyhill
- Supply depot Colchester
- 320 engineer park Thetford
- 322 engineer park Hessay York
- 324 engineer park Stirling

Army storage will in future, with some staff enhancements, be concentrated at the following depots:

- Base ordnance depot Donnington
- Base ordnance depot Bicester, including the Bicester sub-depot at Thatcham
- Ordnance stores depot, which forms part of the Longtown ammunition depot
- Training material park Warminster
- Training material park Sennybridge

In support, a number of units will be reduced and reorganised to become distribution outlets, by 31 March 1996. These are:

- Regional depot Catterick, including stores sub-depot Hessay
- Ordnance support unit Colchester
- Ordnance support unit Old Dalby
- Supply depot Aldershot
- Supply depot Bulford

In addition, 321 engineer park at Longmoor will re-role and become a detachment to central engineer park Long Marston.

We shall continue to consult staff and trade unions about the detailed implementation of these measures.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what analysis he has carried out of the likely cost to the legal aid fund of the provisions of the Family Home and Domestic Violence Bill; and when he expects to publish this analysis.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is estimated that the provisions of the Family Home and Domestic Violence Bill, when fully implemented, could result in some small savings to the legal aid fund. The Lord Chancellor has no plans to publish the analysis.

Contempt of Court

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidelines are laid down for the judiciary on powers with regard to contempt of court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Guidelines on sentencing for contempt of court are laid down for the judiciary by the Court of Appeal.

Rape Cases

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will take action to ensure that half of all rape cases are heard before female judges.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Rape cases are heard before High Court judges and designated senior circuit judges. The allocation of all business in the Crown court is a judicial function, carried out in accordance with directions issued by the Lord Chief Justice and presiding judges, and is not a matter in which I may intervene.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Driver Training

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evaluation he has done of the Devon and Cornwall driver rectification scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The scheme has been identified by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary as good practice and will be promulgated to other forces.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pilot driver rectification schemes there have been in the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not centrally available.

Drivers (Reoffenders)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the reoffending rate for drivers prosecuted for driving without due care and attention; and what reoffending rates have been achieved by the pilot driver rectification schemes that have operated in different parts of the country.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not available.

Rehabilitation of Offenders Act

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the occupations that are exempt from the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974; if he will revise the Act so that all citizens, irrespective of their occupation, are treated the same; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration he has given to reviewing the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Maclean: Exceptions to the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 are most conveniently listed in annex E to the Government's 1993 Green Paper "Disclosure of Criminal Records for Employment Vetting Purposes" CM 2319. A copy is available in the Library. Since that paper was published, osteopaths, chiropractors and operators of the national lottery have been added to the list of excepted categories.

We have no plans to amend the Act itself. However, we are reviewing the scope and scale of the exceptions to the Act as part of a wider review of employment vetting arrangements. We intend to publish in the spring a White Paper setting out our proposals.

Charging of Suspects

Mr. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the basis and rationale for the numerical system in use by police forces to decide whether to charge a suspect with an offence; and if he will give details of the system.

Mr. Maclean: Decisions on charging are matters for chief police officers and the Crown Prosecution Service. I understand that systems offering guidance to police officers in deciding whether to charge or caution a suspect, based upon weights given to different factors, have been in use in a number of forces for some time. Systems vary between forces, but, in general, they are intended to prevent inappropriate use of cautioning.

Director General of the Prison Service

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement giving the conditions of employment of Mr. D. Lewis as the Director General of the Prison Service.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Lewis is employed on a three-year fixed-term appointment, which can be extended to five years by agreement between him and the Department. Apart from his pay and pension, for which separate arrangements have been made, his conditions of employment are as stated in the civil service management code, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he list the objectives to be met by the head of the Prison Service in order to trigger pay bonuses and their link to the bonus scale;

(2) what was the bonus objective of the head of the Prison Service in respect of limiting criminal damage to prisons by prisoners.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) on 18 January, column 531.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what emphasis was made in the contract of employment for the Director General of the Prison Service in relation to (a) financial management and (b) personnel in respect of relations with the prison officers and inmates.

Mr. Howard: The Director General's responsibilities in respect of financial management and personnel matters are set out not in his contract of employment but in the Prison Service's framework document, a copy of which is in the Library.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Director General of the Prison Service's contract ceases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The appointment runs for three years in the first instance, until 5 January 1996, but may be extended to five years by mutual agreement.

Mr. Mahmood Hussein Mattan

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an inquiry into the destruction of his Department's records relating to the execution of Mr. Mahmood Hussein Mattan in Cardiff in 1952.

Mr. Howard: No. My Department's records relating to this capital murder case were destroyed in November 1986, in the course of the standard review processes applied to departmental records under the Public Records Acts.

Records are preserved at such reviews only if they are of continuing administrative use to the Department or if they are selected for permanent preservation at the Public Record Office on the basis of their historical interest. The vast majority of Home Office records are destroyed during these review processes.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 248, if he will list the names of (a) all the members of the ministerial group on domestic violence and their respective Departments and (b) all the agencies to whom the group intends to send the circular.

Mr. Maclean: The membership of the ministerial group on domestic violence is as follows:

Member
David Maclean MP (chairman)	Home Office
John M. Taylor MP	Lord Chancellor's Department
Sir Derek Spencer QC MP	The Law Officers' Department
Robert Jones MP	Department of the Environment
The Baroness Cumberlege; CBE	Department of Health
Ann Widdecombe MP	Employment Department
Eric Forth MP	Department for Education
Alistair Burt MP	Department of Social Security
The Baroness Denton of Wakefield; CBE	Northern Ireland Office
The Right Hon. Lord Fraser of Carmyllie: QC	Scottish Office
Roderick Richards MP	Welsh Office
David Heathcoat-Amory MP	HM Treasury

The list of agencies to which the inter-agency circular on domestic violence will be sent has not yet been finalised, but it will include both statutory and voluntary agencies including, for example, practitioners in the areas of criminal justice, health and housing, and other groups likely to come into contact with those experiencing domestic violence.

Missing Children

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made on a national register of missing children.

Mr. Maclean: The national missing persons bureau was opened at New Scotland Yard in March 1994 and acts as a clearing house for information on vulnerable missing persons reported to the police, including children. It is intended that this function will in due course be undertaken by the police national computer.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many debates in the House on the M11 link road have been initiated by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

None.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 286, on what basis, if the subject of a question was known to him, he would decide whether to include in his reply both formal and informal engagements.

Mr. Newton: On the basis of providing accurate information about relevant contacts, other than correspondence and telephone conversations, to the extent that it was practicable to do so without incurring disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charter Marks

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will review the charter mark awarded to British Gas.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: We have naturally been concerned at some of the media coverage of British Gas in recent months and the citizens charter unit in the Cabinet Office has been talking to Ofgas and to the Gas Consumers Council, which collects detailed information about British Gas's service to customers. Ofgas's latest figures show that British Gas is meeting the targets for the 39 detailed standards of service set by the regulatory body.

The chairman of the Gas Consumers Council has now written to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster expressing concern at evidence of growing consumer dissatisfaction with British Gas's service. The letter stresses that the council has faith in British Gas as a company that puts safety first and deservedly earned the charter mark in 1993. It suggests that our monitoring of British Gas's charter mark should focus on the performance of the company's newly formed business units against the criteria by which the award was judged and that if British Gas no longer meets the criteria it should be given a time scale in which to make the necessary improvements.

The charter mark focuses on service to the customer and we are obviously always very interested in the views of bodies that represent customers. We will consider the council's concerns and seek to establish the facts. A decision on whether to take away a charter mark would be made only if there were a significant and sustained deterioration in service to the customer.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what criteria are established for the awarding of charter marks to the privatised utilities.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The privatised utilities are judged against the same criteria as other public service providers. The criteria are:

Standards—setting, monitoring and publication of explicit standards;

Information and openness—full, accurate information, readily available in plain language;

Choice and consultation—choice wherever possible, regular and systematic consultation with those who use services;

Courtesy and helpfulness—courteous and helpful service, from public servants who will normally wear name badges;

Putting things right—if things go wrong, an apology, a full explanation and a swift and effective remedy;

Value for money—efficient and economic delivery of public services and independent validation of performance against standards;

Customer satisfaction—evidence of measures in place which identify improvements and levels of customer satisfaction;

Measurable improvements is the quality of service over the last two or more years—details of the improvements made with evidence that customers appreciate them; and

An innovative enhancement to services without any extra cost to the taxpayer or consumer—details of planned innovations and evidence that they reflect the concerns of customers.

Civil and Defence Research

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the ratio of Government expenditure on civil and defence research for each financial year since 1984.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The information requested is shown in the table.

Government expenditure on civil and defence research and development, as percentage of grand total: 1984–85 to 1994–95 (Percentage terms, rounded to nearest whole number)

Autism

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce a charter for persons with autism in line with the charter adopted at the fourth Autism Europe Congress in May 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: There are no plans to introduce a charter for persons with autism or any other disability. The citizens charter applies to all users of public services equally, including people with disabilities. Public services should be accessible to all those who need them, including persons with autism. To help improve the accessibility of public services the citizens charter unit published "The Citizen's Charter and People With Disabilities—A Checklist" in 1994. This checklist is to help public service organisations ensure that they take account of the needs of people with disabilities when making decisions about services and how to make them available to all their customers.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further progress has been made in appointing more women and black and Asian people as member of public bodies.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I am pleased to announce a further rise in the number of women and black and Asian people holding appointments. At 1 September 1994, the proportion of public appointments held by women was 30 per cent. compared with 28 per cent. in 1993. The percentage of black and Asian appointees has increased from 2.3 per cent. to 2.6 per cent. over the same period.

Full details will be published shortly in the 1994 edition of "Public Bodies".

These two increases show that the Government have been able actively to pursue their policy of appointing more women and members of the ethnic minorities while at the same time ensuring that appointments are made on the basis of aptitude and merit.

TREASURY

Income Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average rate of the basic rate of income tax would have to be in 1996–97 if the average total personal tax burden on the average-sized family on average earnings were to average the same over the period from April 1992 to April 1997 as it did in April 1992 to April 1993, assuming that no other tax changes beyond indexation for inflation are announced between now and April 1997.

Sir George Young: Tax payments in 1996–97 will depend on the level of earnings and prices in 1996–97 and on household composition and spending patterns.

Royal Household

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 January 1995, Official Report, columns 290–91, how many of the directors of the royal household have a salary abatement in excess of 6 per cent.; what was the percentage salary increase for the director who is on a short-term contract; how many had salary increases in excess of £5,000 per annum and how many in excess of £20,000 per annum; in which years performance pay has been available to the director on short-term contract; and how many directors in 1993–94 had higher salaries than the principal private secretary to the Queen and the keeper of the privy purse.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The director of finance and property services is on a fixed-term contract. He is only director in the royal household who has a salary abatement—currently valued at £18,500—on top of the 6 per cent. after-tax salary deduction, or whose salary exceeds that of the principal private secretary to the Queen and the keeper of the privy purse. His performance bonus for the year to 30 September 1994, the first year of the contract, is yet to be determined. His salary was increased by 5.4 per cent.— £5,940—with effect from 1 April 1994, in line with the Senior Salaries Review Body award to comparable civil servants. No other director in the royal household received a salary increase in excess of £5,000.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the value of his standard spending assessment assessments and (b) the total grants after the area cost adjustment as a per capita figure for the counties of (i) Humberside, (ii) Derbyshire (c) Buckinghamshire and (iv) Surrey for each financial year from 1990–91.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The standard spending assessment, national non-domestic rate and revenue support grant figures for the named county area from 1990–91 to 1995–96 are set out in the tables.

The SSA figures are those for the year in question and have not been adjusted to a comparable basis for year-on-year comparisons.

The 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96 figures for Surrey do not include any SSA, NNDR or RSG element to the receiver for the Metropolitan police district in respect of police services provided by the Metropolitan police in parts of Surrey. The 1995–96 figures for Buckinghamshire do not include any element to the Thames Valley police authority in respect of police services throughout Buckinghamshire.

The 1995–96 figures are those issued in the provisional local government finance settlement 1995—96, announced on 1 December 1994.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the percentage increase of grant-related expenditure assessment between 1984–85 and 1989–90 and in the standard spending assessment between 1989–90 and 1994–95 for (a) Yorkshire and Humberside and (b) the south-east; and to what factors he attributes the variation resulting from the formula of needs distribution.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The percentage increases in grant-related expenditure between 1984—85 and 1989–90 were 38.6 per cent. for the Yorkshire and Humberside region and 36.9 per cent. for the south east region including London.

Grant-related expenditure assessments and standard spending assessments are not fully comparable so comparisons between the GREA for 1989–90 and the SSA for 1994–95 are not given. The percentage increases in standard spending assessments between 1990–91 and 1994–95 were 27.7 per cent. for the Yorkshire and Humberside region and 29.7 per cent. for the south-east region, including London.

These variations are attributable to updating data, changing methodology and changing national aggregates. The figures quoted also make no adjustment for any changes in functions or responsibilities.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received, and from which local government organisations and authorities, (a) for and (b) against the area cost adjustment.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have identified 76 recent representations from local government organisations and authorities about the area cost adjustment, and these are listed. A number of representations cannot be categorised conclusively as "for" or "against" the area cost adjustment, but the majority of representations from authorities outside London and the south east argue for abolishing or reducing the size of the area cost adjustment or making substantial changes to the methodology for its calculation.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department plans to remedy inequities in the area cost adjustment.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government consider that the existing area cost adjustment is well justified, but remain willing to consider arguments for improvements in the way in which the standard spending assessments sallow for the higher costs in some parts of the country.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his assessment of the amount of transfer of grant to (a) London and (b) the south-east under the area cost adjustment for each year since it was introduced together with the comparative figures for Humberside, Lincolnshire, Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The table shows the total contribution of the area cost adjustment to standard spending assessments for (a) London and (b) the rest of the south-east, for each year since SSAs were first introduced in 1990–91. The area cost adjustment is not applied to shire counties outside the south-east.

Contribution of area cost adjustment to SSAs (£ million)

Year	London	Area of the receiver for the Metropolitan Police	South-east (outside London)
1990–91	562.2	—	274.0
1991–92	778.0	—	373.5
1992–93	855.0	—	458.8
1993–94	842.7	—	489.0
1994–95	960.1	—	575.6
1995–96 (proposed)	1002.8	116.1	556.7

Note:
The area of the Receiver for the Metropolitan police excludes the City of London and includes parts of the south-east outside London. Before 1995–96, the SSA for the receiver was based on his budget, as approved by the Home Secretary, which included those extra costs which, from 1995–96, are reflected in the area cost adjustment.

Air Pollution

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals to tackle severe air pollution including winter smog.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State yesterday published a statement of the Government's strategic policies for improving air quality. Proposals on action during air quality episodes, including provision of information to the public, will be published later this year.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to consult with organisations of, and representing, people with disabilities over any restrictions on vehicular use of city centre streets in periods of high air pollution.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government's strategic policies for managing air quality are set out in "Air Quality: Meeting the Challenge", published by the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Scotland, for Wales, for Northern Ireland, and for Transport on 19 January 1995. Those policies are aimed at delivering sustainable improvements in air quality, thereby reducing the risk of episodes of high pollution and possible need for restrictions on vehicular use in such circumstance. It will be the Government's policy to ensure that should such restrictions nevertheless be contemplated, there is appropriate consultation with relevant interests, including people with disabilities.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the successful bids for single regeneration budget funding in London, giving in each case the total amount allocated in each financial year and its breakdown between each district expenditure programme within the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Curry: The proposed funding from the single regeneration budget for the successful bids in London, subject to the finalisation of delivery plans and funding agreements and the availability of resources, is given the table.

No allocation can be made between expenditure programmes that make up the single regeneration budget; the new arrangements are designed to provide flexible support for sustainable regeneration, economic development and industrial competitiveness in a way which meets local needs and priorities. It is therefore not possible to identify how funding of successful SRB bids relates to existing programmes that now form part of the SRB.

Home Ownership

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many self-employed householders were owner-occupiers in the years 1979, 1985 and 1994.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The estimates available are:

	Million	[1]Per cent.
1977–78	1.00	11
1985	1.33	12
1993–94	1.81	13

[1] As a proportion of all owner occupiers.

These figures are taken from the national dwelling and housing survey for the earliest estimate, the 1985 labour force survey and the 1993–94 survey of English housing, and are subject to sampling error.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the state of the United Kingdom housing industry; and if he will indicate those steps he is taking which specifically promote home ownership.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Total housing starts in the United Kingdom in the first nine months of 1994 were 10 per cent. higher than in the same period in 1993. Private housing starts were up 13 per cent. The number of starts in 1994 will be the highest since 1989 for both the private sector and in total. We are continuing to promote home ownership through a range of policies including the right to buy, cash incentive schemes open to local authority and housing association tenants, and shared ownership schemes.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the introduction of a national energy efficiency programme and the environmental implication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I receive many representations on every aspect of energy efficiency, including the numerous energy efficiency initiatives and programmes run by my Department's energy efficiency office.

Hereford and Worcester County Council

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total standard spending assessment of Hereford and Worcester county council in 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 and what it is for 1995–96; and within that total, what the standard spending assessment was for (a) education, (b) social services, (c) police authority and (d) fire services in each of these years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The figures requested are set out in the table. They have not been adjusted for changes of responsibility.

Notes:
[1] 1995–96 figures are those in the proposed local government finance settlement 1995–96, announced by the Secretary of State on 1 December 1994.
[2] Responsibility for most further education was transferred out of local government from 1 April 1993.
[3] SSA for police is allocated direct to West Mercia police authority from 1 April 1995. The police authority receives a police SSA of £48.466 million and a total SSA of £49.339 million.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the level of standard spending assessment per head of population for all local authorities for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I am placing in the Library a table which provides the information requested using the proposed standard spending assessment figures for 1995–96, as announced by the Secretary of State on 1 December 1994.

Assembly of European Regions

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Assembly of European Regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My Department has no record of representations from this organisation.

Electricity-generating Domestic Waste Incineration Plants

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current number and capacity of electricity-generating domestic waste incineration plants in the United Kingdom; and what estimate he has made of the future number and capacity of such plants.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave him on 19 January, Official Report, column 591.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Peace Talks

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress of the peace talks.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) on 19 January, Official Report, column 835.

Fair Employment

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to reform the Fair Employment Act 1989.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Ms Church) on 19 January, Official Report, column 607.

Youth Service

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what calculations he has made of the changes in levels of funding for the youth service in Northern Ireland since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Recurrent funding for the youth service in Northern Ireland has risen from £9.3 million in 1989–90 to £15 million in 1993–94, the last year for which complete figures are available. This represents a 61.3 per cent. increase in total recurrent funding over that period. An increase of 62 per cent. in capital funding—from £1.1 million to almost £1.8 million—has also occurred over the same period.

Milk Marketing Board

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what decision has been made on the reorganisation scheme submitted by the milk marketing board for Northern Ireland

Mr. Ancram: The Agriculture (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 provided for the ending of the statutory milk marketing scheme in Northern Ireland. It enabled the milk marketing board for Northern Ireland to submit proposals for its replacement by voluntary arrangements, for the transfer of its assets to specified successor bodies and for the distribution of the value of those assets to milk producers.

The milk marketing board for Northern Ireland submitted reorganisation proposals to the Department of Agriculture on 31 December 1993. Following this, a wide-ranging consultation exercise was conducted when the views of the various parties with an interest were sought. Subsequently, and in the light of the responses to that consultation, the milk marketing board on 26 August 1994 submitted an amended reorganisation scheme and a further round of consultation was conducted.

In his statement of 21 December 1994, my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State commented on the milk marketing board's proposals. He said that those reorganisation proposals met the requirements of the Agriculture (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 and that subject to and contingent upon approval being given by the EC under articles 92 and 93 of the EC treaty in respect of the state aids inherent in the scheme; certain amendments being made to the scheme; and satisfactory arrangements being put in place to cover any liability upon the residuary board in respect of milk quota superlevy; the scheme submitted by the board was one that merits approval.

The milk marketing board has now submitted the formal amendments to its scheme, as required in my right hon. and learned Friend's statement, together with the necessary assurances in relation to payment of any milk quota superlevy. Formal state aid approval by the European Commission has now been confirmed. The scheme has therefore today been approved in accordance with the requirements of the Agriculture (Northern Ireland) Order 1993.

The order requires that the principles of the approved reorganisation scheme be made public. The principles of the scheme as submitted, and subsequently amended, by the milk marketing board for Northern Ireland were set out in the two consultation documents issued by the Department of Agriculture in January and September 1994. Although some further detailed amendments have been made by the milk marketing board to its scheme, the principles as set out in those documents are unchanged. Copies of the consultation documents, together with a note updating them in the light of the further detailed amendments, are available from the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

Under the approved reorganisation scheme, the existing statutory milk marketing scheme will be revoked on 1 March 1995—the "vesting date". As a result, producers will be free to sell their milk to whom they wish, whether to the successor co-operative being established under the board's reorganisation scheme, to agricultural co-operatives or other group marketing milk on behalf of producers, or direct to processors. The current joint committee system of centrally negotiated pricing according to the milk's ultimate end use will end on the vesting date. The price of milk will be determined by contract between purchaser and supplier.

The milk marketing board for Northern Ireland will be succeeded by a producer co-operative, United Diary Farmers Ltd. and the board's commercial division, Dromona Quality Foods, will be incorporated as wholly owned subsidiary of United. The assets being transferred to United have been set at £18.003 million. Eligible producers who join United will receive shares in United proportionate to their milk production in 1992–93. Eligible producers who elect not to join United will receive redeemable loanstock bearing an interest rate at bank base rate plus a 0.5 per cent. premium. Loan stock will be allocated on the same basis as shares to joiners of United and will be redeemed not later than five years after the vesting date.

In view of the delay in the vesting date from 1 April 1994, as first proposed, to 1 March 1995, the milk marketing board has written to all milk producers who have already signed a contract with United to provide them with an opportunity to withdraw without penalty from that contract.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many staff in his Department have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of those reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 18 January 1995]: Information on offers of outside employment to staff below grade 3 level is not recorded centrally in this Department. No members of staff at grade 3 level or above within the Department of National Heritage have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Veal

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what was the country of origin of the veal served in the House of Commons on 17 January; and what method of production was used.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The Director of Catering Services informs me that the veal used in the Refreshment Department is purchase only from United Kingdom suppliers who use the Quantock method of rearing veal calves.

Kiosk Takings

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what were the takings of the House of Commons kiosk in (a) the four weeks to 24 December and (b) the latest financial year for which figures are complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: I am assuming that my hon. Friend is referring to the main kiosk.

The unaudited figures for December 1994 indicate that the takings of the main kiosk for the four weeks to 24 December 1994 were some £200,000, inclusive of VAT.

The accounts of the Refreshment Department trading fund account for the year ending 31 March 1994 show that the kiosks had a turnover of £674,966, net of VAT. The Director of Catering Services informs me that the turnover of the main kiosk was £521,082, net of VAT.

No. 7 Millbank

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee who are the beneficial owners of, or of the company which owns, the freehold of No. 7 Millbank; and if he will arrange for a copy of the lease to be deposited in the Library.

Mr. Ray Powell: The company which owns No. 7 Millbank is Salinger Properties Ltd. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not the practice to deposit copies of leases in the Library.

WALES

NHS Trust Salary Bills

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many managers are employed by each of the health trusts in (a) Clwyd, (b) Gwynedd and (c) Powys; what is the estimated annual salary bill for each; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The available information is given in the following table. It is not yet possible to distinguish between clinicians and non-clinicians in management grades. The figures cover both. The two trusts in Gwynedd and the North Wales ambulance trust, covering Clwyd and Gwynedd ambulance services, were not established until 1 April 1994.

NHS Trust	Managers (whole-time equivalents) September 1993	Salary bill September 1994	(£ thousands) 1993–94

Unemployment (Young People)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of people in Wales who are currently under 18 years of age but who are not in (a) full-time education, (b) on a training programme or (c) in full-time work.

Mr. Redwood: The latest estimate available is based on the labour force survey conducted last summer. It indicates that, at that time, approximately 10,000, subject to confidence limits of plus or minus 4,000, 16 and 17-year-olds were neither in full-time education, nor on a training programme nor in full-time work. We can only honour our guarantee of a training place for those not in work where the young person asks for such a place.

Community Facilities

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has regarding the voluntary youth services, village halls and community centres programme.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has administered the voluntary youth services, village halls and community centres programme since 1978. The programme aims to assist local voluntary and community groups to repair existing facilities or to construct new premises. It is a collaborative scheme with project costs being shared by the Welsh Office, the local authority and the local sponsor. In recent years, the legislative power for the programme has derived from regulation 12 of the Education (Grant) Regulations 1990.

Since 1978, Welsh Office grants of nearly £6 million have helped fund some 618 local projects. Total provision in 1994–95 is £493,000.

It is our policy that decisions on the funding of local facilities should, wherever possible and appropriate, be taken by local authorities. I am therefore proposing that the programme should be wound up and the finance transferred to local authorities with effect from 31 March 1997. After that date, assistance to local youth, voluntary and community groups to repair existing facilities and to construct new premises will not normally be funded under these regulations.

This proposal does not affect projects which have already been approved under the programme, or those which have been submitted under the 1995–96 round and are currently under consideration.

Before taking a final decision on the proposal, I am consulting local authorities, voluntary groups and other bodies. A copy of the consultation letter, which also includes the arrangements for financial transfer, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Tech'Atlantique

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the relevance of Tech'Atlantique for Wales in the European Union.

Mr. Richards: Tech'Atlantique is a recently established network of universities in those regions of the European Union which border the Atlantic ocean. As yet, no Welsh university has joined the network. It is therefore too soon to assess the relevance of the network to Wales.

Four Motor Regions

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to strengthen links between Wales and the four motor regions and nations of the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There is a programme of activity with the four motor regions. Collaboration covers a number of areas including business, research and development, healthcare, education, the environment and culture. A visit to Catalunya by Welsh applied scientists and an exchange of graduates between innovative companies in Wales and Baden-Württemberg are some of the new initiatives currently under consideration. In addition, the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) is to visit both Lombardy and Catalunya later this year.

National links with Europe are taken forward through the United Kingdom's membership of the European Union.

Local Council Corporate Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the application of the competitive tendering programme in respect of local councils' corporate services.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber) on 1 December 1994, Official Report, columns 879–80, by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State at the Department of the Environment.

Youth Service Funding

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what calculations he has made of the changes in levels of funding for the youth service in Wales since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for individual local councils to determine the priority that they give to youth activities when apportioning money between functions. Net current expenditure by local authorities for the years 1990–91, 1991–92 and 1992–93, was £12.0 million, £13.3 million and £13.7 million respectively. Information is not available on a consistent basis for prior years and outturn data is not yet available for 1993-94.

Public Bodies (Running Costs)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the indicative management running costs he has agreed with each of the non-departmental public bodies he sponsors.

Mr. Redwood: I have asked the NDPBs sponsored by my Department to keep within the following running costs budgets in 1995–96:

	£ million
Housing for Wales	2.87
Sports Council for Wales	1.039
Arts Council of Wales	1.719
Further Education Funding Council	2.558
Higher Education Funding Council	1.679
Cardiff Bay Development Corporation	4.101
Land Authority for Wales	1.882
National Museum of Wales	10.452
National Library of Wales	4.523
Royal Commission for Ancient and Historic Monuments	1.18
Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting	0.985
Wales Youth Agency	0.386
Welsh Language Board	1.123
ACAC	1.65
Wales Tourist Board	4.150
Welsh Development Agency	13.2
Development Board for Rural Wales	3.689
Countryside Council for Wales	8.1

Imax Cinema

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the chairman of the council of the national museum of Wales and the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation for Wales with respect to the funding of the proposed Imax cinema and the redevelopment of the Welsh industrial and maritime museum; on what date consent for capital expenditure on (a) the Imax cinema equipment and (b) the cinema building was granted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 1 December 1994, Official Report, column 814, I have received no further representations from either the president of the council of the national museum of Wales or the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a further statement on the forms of direct accountability of NHS trusts to (a) the Welsh Office, (b) health authorities and (c) GP fundholders.

Mr. Redwood: NHS trusts, in Wales, enter into accountability agreements which outline the relationship and respective responsibilities between myself, the director for the Welsh Office Health Department, as accounting officer, and the trust chairmen and their chief executive officers. The prime duty is to provide good quality health care for the people of Wales.

The financial obligations that trusts must meet are to break even, taking one year with another, make a target return—currently 6 per cent.—and stay within the annually established external financing limit.

Trusts are also required to publish annual reports and audited accounts and to hold at least one meeting a year open to the public.

Trusts are directly accountable to health authorities and GP fundholders through service contracts to agreed levels of quality, quantity and price.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what undertakings have been (a) sought and (b) given with regard to the continuity of employment for the chief executive-designate newly appointed by the University hospital of Wales—Cardiff Royal Infirmary trust designate subsequent to, and conditional upon, the formation of that NHS trust and his appointment of a chairman and board for it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. South Glamorgan health authority as the employer has offered a contract to the chief executive designate of the University Hospital of Wales—Cardiff Royal Infirmary group. If the application for trust status is approved, the trust will be required to consider and approve the appointment of a chief executive.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the levels of borrowings of NHS trusts in Wales, (a) for capital developments and (b) for other purposes in each financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 8 December 1994, Official Report, column 347.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when a decision will be taken on the future host organisation and format for the national blood transfusion service Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The future management arrangements of the Welsh blood service will be subject to consultation. The consultation period is scheduled to commence in January 1995 and be completed by end February 1995 and an announcement on the result will follow shortly thereafter.

Lobbying Organisations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what occasions he or his fellow Welsh Office ministers or officials have met representatives of lobbying organisations.

Mr. Redwood: I and my Ministers meet Members of Parliament who may bring in delegations to see us. If Members chose to bring in lobbying organisations as part of those delegations, we would not refuse to see them. We do not see lobbying organisations on their own. Officials frequently meet representatives from a wide range of bodies.

Residuary Body for Wales

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made for the establishment of the residuary body for Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The residuary body will be set up on 1 February. The members will be:

Mr. D. Hugh Thomas CBE (chairman)
Mr. J. Elwyn Davies
Miss D. Adrianne Jones CBE
Mr. Brian T. Williams

The Secretary of State will be issuing guidance to the residuary body. Local authorities will be able to comment on a draft of the guidance before it is issued in final form to the residuary body.

SCOTLAND

Barnacle Geese

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the implications for the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 of the recent acquittal in Dumfries sheriff court of a farmer for the shooting of barnacle geese without a licence.

Sir Hector Monro: None.

EDUCATION

Student Loans Company

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what means of redress a student has against any malfunctioning of the Student Loans Company that affects his or her financial or educational position.

Mr. Boswell: As indicated in the charter for higher education, a student who has a complaint against the Student Loans Company should, in the first instance, contact the company. If he is not satisfied with the company's response, or more than three months has elapsed since the complaint was made, the borrower can ask the company to refer his complaint to the independent assessor appointed in accordance with the Student Loans Act 1990. A copy of the assessor's terms of reference was placed in the Library of the House on 19 July 1990.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans she has to hold a public inquiry into the functioning of the Student Loans Company;

(2) what assessment she has made as to the extent to which the Student Loans Company is honouring its promises on quality of service to students;

(3) what assessment she has made as to the quality of service being offered by the Student Loans Company; and what plans she has to improve its performance.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has no plans to hold a public inquiry. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 16 January, Official Report, columns 340–41.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether the staff of the Student Loans Company are on performance-related pay; and what has happened to pay levels over the past three years.

Mr. Boswell: The pay of staff of the Student Loans Company is performance related. Pay increases for individuals are a matter for the company. For 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 they were settled within overall totals of 4.42 per cent., 1.48 per cent. and 2.49 per cent., respectively.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the estimated cost of the investigation being carried out by Coopers and Lybrand into allegations concerning the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Boswell: Coopers and Lybrand was appointed to undertake the investigation, following competitive tender action. Its bid represented the best value for money in relation to the competition.

The individual value of contracts between the Department and its suppliers is considered to be commercial in confidence and cannot therefore be disclosed.

Youth Service (Funding)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what calculations she has made of the changes in levels of funding for the youth service in England since 1989; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: It is for local authorities to decide how much of their budget they dedicate to expenditure on the youth service.

Local education authorities' net recurrent expenditure on the youth service, as recorded in returns to the Department of Environment, between 1989–90 and 1992–93, the latest year for which figures are available, was as follows:

Year	Net recurrent expenditure (actual) £ million
1989–90	235.3
1990–91	241.7
1991–92	251.7
1992–93	273.9

Schools (Capital Programme)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current estimate of outstanding capital works in schools in each local education authority and for England as a whole.

Mr. Robin Squire: Such information is not held centrally for individual LEAs. For England as a whole, information from the 1991 National Audit Office report on school buildings suggested that some £2 billion, at 1990 prices, was required to deal with the outstanding capital needs of school buildings. In the four years from 1991–92, Government support for capital and repair work at maintained schools has amounted to some £2.5 billion and a further £620 million will be available in 1995–96.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what capital grants have been given (a) to each grant-maintained school and (b) to local education authority schools in each year since 1990.

Mr. Robin Squire: Allocations to individual schools are the responsibility of their LEAs or the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member in respect of allocations to individual grant-maintained schools.

Clerical Support

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money was spent in each of the last five years on clerical support for teachers in schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table gives local education authorities' expenditure on administrative and clerical staff, and education support staff in LEA-maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools, from 1988–89 to 1992–93, the latest year for which figures are available.

Year	Expenditure
	£ million, cash	£ million 1994–95 prices
1988–89	598.6	803.5
1989–90	723.4	907.7
1990–91	842.8	979.1
1991–92	989.8	1,081.9
1992–93	1,081.9	1,137.3

Public Bodies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for how many boards, authorities, committees and other public bodies she is responsible, in the whole or in part, for appointments; what is the total number of such appointments; and what is the total public spending by the bodies.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend is responsible, in whole or in part, for 385 appointments to 28 boards, authorities, committees and other public bodies. Total public spending by these bodies in 1994–95 is estimated at some £6.6 billion.

Pre-School Education

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pre-school education places were available in England at the latest available date; and what percentage that number is of the total number of children in the relevant age group.

Mr. Forth: Information on the number of education places is not available. In January 1994, there were 675,000 pupils below compulsory school age in maintained nursery and primary schools in England, of whom 347,000 were in nursery provision. The participation rates were 52 per cent. and 27 per cent. respectively.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which elements of gross income and allowed expenditure are discounted in order to reach the figure for assessment purposes in respect of the amount of parental contribution to fees to be paid in the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Robin Squire: As a general principle, parents must declare their gross annual income from all sources for the purpose of assessment under the assisted places scheme. Non-taxable social security benefits are excluded from the assessment of parents' relevant income. For self-employed persons, deductions from the gross profit amount agreed with HM inspector of taxes may be made only in respect of capital allowances, losses and stock relief. In all cases, an allowance—£1,140 in the current academic year, 1994–95—is made for each child, other than the assisted place holder, or other dependent relative in the household. This reduces the relevant income figure and helps larger families in particular. The only other allowance which is discounted from gross income is the blind person's allowance.

Student Finance

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what the Government are doing to assist students in further education who do not wish to fall into debt through student loans and yet are unable to exist on student grants.

Mr. Boswell: Student loans are not available for further education. It is Government policy to provide support for students in higher education through grant and student loan. Loans are provided on generous terms. It is for individual students to decide whether or not to take out their loan entitlement.

School Closures

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools have been closed in each of the last five years.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 17 January 1995]: The table lists, by the year in which the closure was proposed to take effect, the number of approved school closure proposals. In some instances, the actual date of implementation may have been modified from that originally proposed.

Year proposed for closure	Number of schools
1990	322
1991	310
1992	437
1993	224
1994	103

Pupil Testing

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her policy on the body administering standard assessment tasks using unqualified student teachers to do the marking; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The recruitment of qualified markers to mark the national curriculum tests for 11 and 14-year-olds this year is going very well. No unqualified student teachers will be employed to do the marking.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how she will prevent the standard assessment task results for 11-year-olds available in June being used by parents for school selection; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend cannot do, and would not want to do, what the hon. Member has suggested. The national curriculum testing and assessment arrangements are intended to raise standards and to promote accountability. My right hon. Friend intends to require schools to publish, in their annual reports and prospectuses, their pupils' aggregate results in the national curriculum assessments and tests for 11-year-olds. This will provide clear and robust information about schools' performance which parents may take in account, alongside other information about schools, when deciding to which school they should apply.

My right hon. Friend has, however, made it clear that the results of national curriculum tests and assessments will not be included in national school by school performance tables in 1995.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Action

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have entered community action and how many were participating in community action in each month since the start of the programme in each region and for Great Britain; what information he has about the destination of those participants who have left community action; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 20 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your question about the number of men and women who have participated in Community Action in each month since the programme began and the destination of Community Action leavers.

Since the programme began on 27 July 1993 to 30 December 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, 45,588 men and 11,647 women have started on Community Action.

The number of men and women who were participating in Community Action in each month since the programme began, in each Employment Service region and for Great Britain are contained in the attached tables. There are separate tables for the 1993/4 and 1994/5 operational years for ease of reference.

Information is gathered on the destination of all Community Action leavers immediately on leaving and also through a postal follow up survey three months after leaving.

From April to the end of December this year 30,010 men and 7,673 women had left the programme. Of these 10 per cent. of men and 13 per cent. of women directly entered employment a further 14 per cent. of men and 16 per cent. of women went directly into training or full time education.

Three month follow up data shows that 15 per cent. of male leavers and 20 per cent. of female leavers are in employment at that stage, and 11 per cent. of male and 13 per cent. of female leavers are in training or full time education. This is at the top end of the target range for positive outcomes from the programme.

I hope this is helpful.

Careers Services Contracts

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the name of the organisation which has been awarded the contract for careers services for each local authority.

Mr. Paice: Information on organisations tendering to provide careers services is commercial in confidence. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce those organisations with which he will contract when negotiations are finalised.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline the timetable and the procedures used for the allocation of the careers service contract for the Solihull area.

Mr. Paice: All bids were assessed against the criteria published in the careers service prospectus. In Solihull, the Department is negotiating with two bidders to determine which offers the best careers service for Solihull and the best value for money for the taxpayer. Both bidders have until 3 February to respond with revised proposals.

FOCUS Computer System

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library the full FOCUS business case.

Mr. Oppenheim: The FOCUS business case is a working document prepared by the Health and Safety Executive for internal use to support the introduction of the FOCUS computer system and not for publication.

Trades Union Rights

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to introduce legislation giving effect to the decision of the European Court of Justice regarding trades union rights in respect of collective redundancy and transfer of undertakings.

Mr. Oppenheim: The relevant legislation on all but one of the points covered by the judgments was amended by the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993. The Government are presently considering what action needs to be taken on the remaining issue, concerning consultation with employees' representatives where there are no recognised trade unions.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the average weekly earnings inclusive of gross pay and exclusive of overtime for full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) the regions of Scotland including and excluding Grampian and (c) Great Britain for (i) male manual workers, (ii) male non-manual workers, (iii) all male workers, (iv) female manual workers, (v) female non-manual workers, (vi) all female workers and (vii) all workers;

(2) if he will show (a) average weekly earnings, (b) weekly median earnings, (c) the percentage of workers earning below (i) £208.53 per week and (ii) £156.40 per week and (d) the distribution of earnings for those earning (1) under the point below which 10 per cent. of earners fall and (2) the point which 10 per cent. of earners exceed, for Scotland including and excluding Grampian, broken down by (x) manual, (y) non-manual and (z) all workers;

(3) if he will list the percentage of full-time workers earning less than (a) £221.50, (b) £208.53 and (c) £156.40 per week inclusive of gross pay and excluding overtime in (i) Great Britain, (ii) Scotland and (iii) the regions of Scotland excluding and including Grampian for (1) male workers, (2) female workers, (3) male manual workers, (4) male non-manual workers and (5) all workers;

(4) if he will list the proportion of full-time workers with hourly earnings inclusive of gross pay but exclusive of overtime below (a) £5.88, (b) £5.53, (c) £4.15 and (d) £3.00 in (i) Great Britain, (ii) Scotland and (iii) the regions of Scotland exclusive and inclusive of Grampian for (1) male workers, (2) female workers, (3) manual workers, (4) non-manual workers and (5) all workers.

Mr. Oppenheim: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

European Commission Jobs

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will apply for derogation for Britain in respect of European Commission staff regulations regarding European Commission jobs in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: No. I have no plans to make a statement.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the precedence between the European Commission's staff regulations and the Race Relations Act 1974 in respect of European Commission jobs in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the consistency of EC staff regulations with the United Kingdom Race Relations Act 1974 in respect of non-EU nationals applying for jobs with the European Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: The EC staff regulations are directly applicable in all member states, including the UK. I have no plans to make a statement.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money is owed to training providers in the parliamentary constituency of Lewisham, Deptford and the London borough of Lewisham by the South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: This is a matter for the administrative receiver.

TRANSPORT

Air Pollution

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to consult organisations of and representing people with disabilities, over any proposed restrictions on vehicular use of city centre streets in periods of high air pollution.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport is in close and regular touch with organisations of and for disabled people through its statutory advisory body, the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee. Members of that committee are consulted as a matter of course on all issues which may affect the interests of disabled people. I fully understand the vital importance of personal mobility to many disabled people and the necessity of ensuring that it is not compromised.

Vehicle Licensing System

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to introduce the order in respect of the change to a continuous operating licence system for heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles.

Mr. Norris: I expect the commencement order for the provisions concerning operator licensing contained within the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 to be made this summer. It is likely that those provisions will be brought into force at the end of the year.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Accidents)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents involving heavy goods vehicles there were in each of the last five years for which figures are available by police authority; and how many fatalities and serious injuries there were in each case.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Bus Services (Safety)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what meetings he (a) has held or (b) proposes to hold with organisations running public or private bus services to improve safety for passengers during late evening and night services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The primary responsibility for the safe operation of bus services rests with bus operators. It is in their commercial interest to ensure that services are safe and attractive for passengers.

The Department chairs a standing panel of representatives of bus operators, trade unions, the police and interested Government Departments, which meets to consider trends in assaults on bus crews and passengers and to recommend preventive measures. The Department is also commissioning a national review of transport-related crime, perceptions of safety and current preventive initiatives. This will include public and private bus companies.

British Rail

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of privatisation on British Rail's subsidiary, British Rail Telecom, and on the optic fibre it has already laid.

Mr. Watts: I have assessed the future of British Rail Telecommunications Ltd. in conjunction with the British Railways Board. Privatisation will best secure for the future the high-quality telecommunications links necessary for railway operations and will also provide opportunities for the company to exploit its significant cable, including optic fibre, network.

Austrian Tunnelling Method

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to what caused the Heathrow tunnel collapse in October; what part was played in this by the new Austrian tunnelling method; and what changes in plans for tunnelling at Heathrow and the new Jubilee line he is making as a result.

Mr. Norris: I understand from the British Airports Authority and the Health and Safety Executive that their respective investigations into the Heathrow tunnel collapse in October are continuing. I have received no information on the specific causes of the collapse or the part played by the new Austrian tunnelling method. The HSE's eventual report will be published in due course.

Plans for carrying out tunnelling are primarily a matter for those carrying out the work. I understand that the HSE has published a discussion document to inform those proposing to restart NATM and has established a procedure for assessing any such proposals. London Underground is considering its construction plans for the Jubilee line extension, in the light of the HSE's recent decision that use of NATM can be recommenced for some of the project's tunnels. BAA is also considering its construction plans at Heathrow.

Disused Underground Stations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many disused Underground stations there are in London; if he will list them; and if he will make a statement about the arrangements for the safety of the public in respect of each of them.

Mr. Norris: The 22 disused Underground stations are as follows:

London Underground: Disused Stations
Aldwych
Blake Hall
British Museum
Brompton Road
Bull and Bush
Chancery Lane (old Central line station)
City Road
Down Street
Highgate (high level)
King William Street
King's Cross (old Metropolitan line station)
Lords
Mark Lane
Marlborough Road
North Weald
Ongar
Osterley (old Piccadilly line station)
South Kentish Town
St Mary's
Swiss Cottage (Metropolitan line station)
Wood Lane
York Road

I understand that London Underground has a variety of arrangements in place to ensure the safety of the public.

Public Transport

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what meetings he (a) has held or (b) proposes to hold with organisations running public transport systems in the United Kingdom to make the service more user-friendly.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet the chairman of London Transport and the British Railways Board to discuss a wide range of issues including measures to improve services for passengers. For bus services outside London, I have reconstituted the bus working group, which will include representatives from the Confederation of Passenger Transport, local authority associations and the National Federation of Bus Users to see what further measures can be taken to improve services within the deregulated framework.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the total costs to date of preparations for privatising the British Rail system; and what is his estimate of such costs over each of the next four years, including any cost of regulation.

Mr. Watts: Total costs of rail privatisation to date of the Department, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising, and the Office of the Rail Regulator, are £48 million.

The costs of BR and Railtrack are primarily a matter for the industries themselves. However, we understand that their total costs to date are around £160 million.

Forward plans of expenditure by the Department, Opraf, and Orr for 1995–96 to 1997–98 will be published in the Transport Report 1995. Projected expenditure by BR and Railtrack is a matter for them.

Road Traffic (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last assessed the road traffic needs of Doncaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The review of the road programme announced on 30 March 1994 was the most recent review of the needs of the trunk road and motorway network, including that around Doncaster. The needs of the local road network are reviewed annually by Doncaster metropolitan borough council in its transport policies and programmes and the Secretary of State's decisions on that were announced on 15 December 1994.

Fire Service (Ships)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the additional demands made on the fire service by ships in United Kingdom coastal waters and ports (a) registered under the British flag and (b) registered under a flag of convenience; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: None. Incidents at sea requiring attendance or advice from the fire service are rare, although suitable arrangements are in place should this be necessary. There is no evidence of any relationship between the demand on the fire service caused by vessels on fire in UK waters and the vessels' flag state.

M1 Widening Schemes

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the time scale for making public the result of his internal reviewing respect of M1 widening schemes of (a) junctions 24 to 28 and (b) junctions 28 to 31.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 19 January 1995]: There is no special review of these schemes. All schemes in the road programme are subject to appraisal at key stages in their development. The results of public consultations on the schemes for junctions 23A to 25 and 25 to 28 will be announced in due course. Options to put to the public are still being considered for the scheme for junctions 28 to 31.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Commission (Fines)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take following the fines levied by the European Commission on countries for allowing farmers to collect subsidies to which they were not entitled.

Mr. Jack: The financial penalties, or disallowances, imposed by the Commission's decision on the 1991 clearance of accounts will be collected from the member states concerned by automatic deductions from the monthly reimbursements of common agricultural policy expenditure. The UK has fared well, with disallowance of some £2 million compared to a total disallowance of £1.2 billion for all member states. It is important to note that disallowances are penalties imposed on member states for the failure to implement properly legislation relating to CAP scheme rules and controls.

While these deficiencies may result in farmers, or other recipients, being paid subsidies for which they are not eligible, this is by no means always the case. Some two thirds of the 1991 disallowance is on Italy and Spain for failure to implement milk quotas and exceeds the amounts received by those member states in respect of milk support. Where farmers are found to have overclaimed, it is the member state's responsibility to recover the money due and apply the appropriate penalties. Failure to do so would render them liable to disallowance.

We are keeping our own procedures under constant review. With regard to other member states, we are committed to ensuring that proper controls are in place, and that appropriate penalties are applied where this is not the case. We fully support a proposal currently on the table which, among other things, seeks to speed up the clearance of accounts process and improve the financial management of the CAP.

Fishing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the increase in Spanish vessels authorised by the Fisheries Councils on the existing balance stocks of fishing fleets to fish as required by section 1 sub-paragraph (ii) of the Fisheries Council statement.

Mr. Jack: Under the agreement reached at the December Fisheries Council, it is for each member state to inform the Commission, by the end of March this year, of the reference list of its named vessels which may have access to the various fisheries covered by the agreement, of the fishing effort assessed by the member state to be necessary to enable it to take up fully its fishing possibilities for total allowable catch and non-TAC species and, where the potential effort corresponding to free access for vessels in the reference list exceeds the assessed effort, the arrangements envisaged by the member state to regulate fishing effort. The Commission will make this information available to the other member states, and will then make a report and proposal to the Council, by 1 May, for the regulation of fishing effort. The Council shall decide on that proposal by 30 June. The agreement makes it clear that existing balances in exploitation by fishery and by zone are not to be disturbed.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the effect of the swaps of haddock and cod agreed in the Fisheries Board agreement in Spain between (a) Spain and Belgium and (b) Spain and France on (i) establishing a Spanish track record and entitlement for areas where Spain has not fished before and (ii) the principle of relative stability in those areas.

Mr. Jack: Article 9 of the basic Council Regulation of the Common Fisheries Policy, 3760/92 provides that member states may, after notifying the Commission, exchange all or part of the fishing availabilities allocated to them. Such quota swaps are a regular part of the management of the CFP and are valuable in permitting the best use of fishing opportunities. The United Kingdom makes such swaps in the interest of and with the support of our fishing industry. Such swaps do not affect the relative stability shares on which the Council agrees quotas each year.

The swaps of haddock and cod apply in areas where Spain already fishes. Thus, they have no impact on track record or entitlement for areas where Spain has not fished before.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the consequences for the fishing industry of the United Kingdom failing to meet its commitment to reduce catching capacity by 1996 under the multi-annual guidance plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The targets for UK fleet reduction set out in Commission decision 92/593/EEC have since been made mandatory by Council decision 94/15/EEC. Council regulation (EEC) 3699/93 also provides that progress against targets may be taken into account in determining eligibility for certain types of structural assistance. It would be for the Commission in the first instance to consider what action might be appropriate in the event of the United Kingdom targets not being met.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what commitments the British Government have made under the current multi-annual guidance plan for reducing United Kingdom catching capacity by 1996.

Mr. Jack: Commission decision 92/593 of 21 December 1992 on a multi-annual guidance programme for the fishing fleet of the United Kingdom for the period 1993 to 1996 pursuant to Council regulation (EEC) No. 4028/86 sets out the reductions required in the United Kingdom's fleet capacity. A copy is available in the House Library.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what action has already been taken to ensure that the United Kingdom meets catching capacity targets for 1996 set under the multi-annual guidance plan;

(2) what measures the Government intend imposing on the fishing industry for 1995 to ensure that the United Kingdom meets catching capacity targets for 1996 set under the multi-annual guidance plan.

Mr. Jack: The 1993 and 1994 decommissioning schemes should reduce fleet capacity by about 4.8 per cent. at a cost of £16.7 million. My right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 18 January that a further £28 million will be made available for decommissioning increasing the amount for 1995–96 to £12 million and continuing the scheme at this rate for a further two years.

Capacity penalties on licence transfers and aggregations also contribute to the achievement of the MAGP target by requiring a reduction in aggregate capacity on each occasion.

We shall be monitoring the progress of the reduction in our fleet but I do not expect that it will be necessary to impose further measures in 1995 unless it becomes evident that fishing effort of the remaining fleet is rising.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action the Commission has taken to condemn the landing of undersize fish in Spanish waters.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 January 1995]: It has not been the procedure of the Commission to publish details of reports made by the inspectors of member states enforcement of, and adherence to, the rules of the common fisheries policy. The United Kingdom was however, successful at the December Fisheries Council in securing a commitment from the Commission that it would report annually on inspections it carried out in member states, together with an assessment of the results of those inspections and details of any improvements in national enforcement arrangements which it had recommended.

Water Pollution

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department is taking to minimise agricultural pollution of rivers and seas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: My Department provides free advice to farmers on pollution prevention, has widely distributed free codes of good agricultural practice and has in place a significant research and development programme examining how to minimise pollution from farm wastes, nutrients and pesticides. In addition, 32 nitrate-sensitive areas have been designated, and consultation is currently taking place over designating 72 vulnerable zones under the EC nitrate directive with a view to reducing nitrate leaching. Furthermore, all pesticides are subject to strict approval arrangements which take into account their potential to pollute water. Regular reviews of older pesticides ensure that they continue to meet our strict safety standards. My Department also carries out research into the fate of various contaminants in coastal waters and makes a significant contribution to monitoring those waters through a national monitoring programme.

Set-aside Land

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest developments in discussions with the EC regarding enabling set-aside land to be used for tree-growing; and if he will specify the types of trees included in such arrangements.

Mr. Jack: I am pleased to say that the European Commission has now accepted in principle the United Kingdom's view that land taken out of arable production under the forestry and agri-environmental schemes or "structural" set-aside should, under certain conditions, be allowed to count against a farmer's set-aside obligation under the arable area payments scheme or "market" set-aside. We now need a rapid decision in Council to amend the relevant legislation. Once the proposal has been adopted, we anticipate that the new approach will give a welcome boost to our environmental and farm woodland schemes.

Subject to the detailed rules to be agreed, land planted to woodland under the farm woodland premium scheme and the woodland grant scheme will be eligible to count towards set-aside. Most broadleaved and coniferous species may be planted, but planting under the FWPS for the purposes of agro-forestry or for producing coppice, Christmas trees or cricket bat willow is not permitted.

Short rotation coppice may already be grown on set-aside land under the non-food use rules. We have announced our intention to offer grants under the woodland grant scheme to support this activity and I hope that the Council decision referred to above will provide the legal basis for this, too.

Irish Box

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial aid has been offered to the Government of the Republic of Ireland in connection with the revised access arrangements for the Irish box; and for what purpose it is designed.

Mr. Jack: The agreement reached at the December Fisheries Council provides for additional financial aid to be provided for Ireland in order to improve controls, including operating expenditure, allowable under Community practice and within the framework of the financial guidelines.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of resources for the management supervision of fishing in the Irish box; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Detailed plans for the implementation of the control measures for the Irish box from 1 January 1996 have still to be developed. In developing such measures, we shall be making a very careful assessment of the resources necessary to ensure effective enforcement of the new rules.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the United Kingdom will retain responsibility for the management of fishing in the Irish box; when the details for the management plans will be considered by the Council of Ministers; and what application has been made to the EC for the costs involved.

Mr. Jack: There is no change in the areas for which coastal member states have responsibility. The United Kingdom retains responsibility for enforcement of the common fisheries policy in those parts of the Irish box which fall within UK fishery limits. The rest of the Irish box remains, as now, the responsibility of the Irish Republic's enforcement authorities. The United Kingdom will be co-operating with the Republic of Ireland to ensure the effective operation of those provisions in the agreement which are relevant to the Irish box. The necessary measures will be put in hand in the forthcoming months. No application has been made to the EC for the costs involved, but some enforcement expenditure in the UK may be eligible for aid.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

The Gambia

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what considerations underlay the timing, in relation to the abortive coup in The Gambia, of the issuing of his Department's advice to United Kingdom citizens not to travel to that country.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the letter I sent him on 9 January. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for United Kingdom policy towards The Gambia of the restoration of diplomatic relations between that country and Libya.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom has a long-standing friendship with the Gambian people. It is for the Gambian Government to decide whom they have relations with.

Diplomatic Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the total diplomatic expenditures for each year from 1979 to 1994 in 1993 prices.

Atomic Energy Co-operation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the amendments made by date and command number since 1965 to the 1958 United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement on atomic energy co-operation, setting out the particular purpose of each amendment; and which amendments were ratified in accordance with the Ponsonby rule.

Mr. David Davis: The amendments which have been made to the 1958 United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement since 1965 entered into force on the following dates: 28 March 1969, Cmnd 4119; 8 April 1970, Cmnd 4383; 26 January 1975, Cmnd 6017; 25 March 1980, Cmnd 7976; 16 November 1984, Cmnd 9434; and 23 December 1994, Cmnd 2686. The prime purpose of each amendment was to extend the time-limited article III bis; occasionally new paragraphs on nuclear materials accountancy procedures were inserted.

As for the last part of the hon. Member's question, that information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the reason for the time period that elapsed between the presenting to the US Congress by President Clinton of the proposed amendments to the 1958 United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement on atomic energy matters and the same amendments being laid before Parliament.

Mr. David Davis: The 1994 amendment to the 1958 United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement was laid before Parliament in good time in order to ensure its ratification before the end of 1994. As US procedures require such documents to be laid before Congress for 90 days, it was necessary for the amendment to be presented earlier in the United States.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis), has yet replied to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) in respect of the working group dealing with co-operation on computer modelling referred to in the debate on the Anglo-American mutual defence agreement on atomic energy, Official Report, 15 December, column 1238.

Mr. David Davis: I wrote to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South on 9 January. I shall place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the technical annex to the 1958 United States—United Kingdom mutual defence agreement on atomic energy co-operation, as amended; and what information he has as to its publication status in the United States.

Mr. David Davis: The technical annex to the 1958 United Kingdom—United States mutual defence agreement is a classified document. I have no plans to place a copy in the Library or to arrange for its publication.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters in regard to regional non-proliferation arrangements and the prospects of Pakistan and India joining the nuclear non-proliferation treaty were discussed during his recent visit to Pakistan and India.

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs urged Pakistan and India to accede to the non-proliferation treaty. Both indicated that they were unable at this time to sign the treaty.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's proposals put to the final preparatory committee for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty preview and extension conference in New York in January.

Mr. David Davis: Our aim at the fourth preparatory committee for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty conference will be to settle a number of unresolved issues left over from the third preparatory committee. These include the allocation of posts, the provision of background papers, the agenda, and questions related to financing and rules of procedure for the conference, which opens on 17 April 1995.

Uranium Sales

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the next EU Foreign Affairs Council the allegations made by the South African Government on 9 January in respect of the sale by France of enriched uranium to South Africa in the 1980s; and if he will press the presidency of the Council of Ministers to investigate the allegation.

Mr. David Davis: I have no plans to raise this matter at the next EU Foreign Affairs Council.

Croatia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the President of Croatia had made about the removal of UNPROFOR troops; and what was Her Majesty's Government's response.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: President Tudjman of Croatia wrote to the United Nations Secretary-General on 13 January to inform him that the Croatian Government did not wish UNPROFOR's mandate to be renewed in the UN protected areas beyond 31 March 1995. The Croatian deputy Foreign Minister had forewarned us of this decision on 11 January.

In our response, we have made clear our disappointment with this development and our concern that it puts at risk the search for a peace settlement in the region. UNPROFOR has a vital role in this process. Although we recognise the domestic pressures on the Croatian Government to find a solution to the situation on the Krajina, we have urged them, both nationally and through our support for the Security Council statement on 17 January, to reconsider their decision.

Hong Kong

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by the European Union to establish a human rights centre in Hong Kong; and what has been the response of the Chinese Government.

Mr. Goodlad: The European Union has no plans to set up a human rights centre in Hong Kong. The European Parliament added a new "remark" to the 1995 budget line B7-5240 to the effect that the budget line could be used to "promote the protection of human rights in countries where there is soon to be a change of sovereignty."

Such remarks represent the views of the European Parliament alone, and have no binding force on the other European Union institutions.

We are not aware of any response from the Chinese Government.

BBC World Service

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the BBC World Service with particular reference to funding the balance of broadcasts in different languages and the relationship between his Department and the service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: As stated in the White Paper on "The Future of the BBC" Cm 2621 of July 1994, the World Service will in future operate to targets and performance indicators agreed with FCO, instead of a detailed prescription of languages and hours of broadcasts. Priorities for the allocation of resources are discussed regularly between the World Service and the FCO.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 9 December 1994, Official Report, columns 425–26, which gave details of some of the targets agreed for the current triennium.

East Timor

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what ways British policy on the annexation of East Timor by Indonesia has changed since the mid-1970s; and what evidence he has of the effect of these changes.

Mr Goodlad: Our policy has been consistent throughout this period. We do not recognise Indonesia's annexation of East Timor and continue to encourage Indonesia and Portugal to work together, under the auspices of the UN Secretary-General, to find a lasting and acceptable solution to the problem. We welcome the outcome of the latest round of talks on 9 January.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has recently been taken by UNAMIR forces in Rwanda to disarm and control former soldiers in the Rwandan army.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UNAMIR's mandate does not cover disarming former soldiers of the Rwandan army and we have no reports that such action has taken place.

French Foreign Policy

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has expressed concern to the French Government about the adverse consequences of their foreign policy initiatives with Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have raised the recent French decision to open an interests section in Baghdad both bilaterally and in discussion with European Union partners. We expressed our concern at the move, and underlined that we had no plans to follow suit, given Iraq's continuing failure to implement outstanding Security Council resolutions.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has expressed concern to the French Government about the adverse consequences of their foreign policy initiatives with Algeria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The French were party to the EU statement in September 1994 calling on all sides to cease all acts of violence and to allow peaceful dialogue.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has expressed concern to the French Government about the adverse consequences of their foreign policy initiatives with Sudan.

Mr. Hogg: EU concerns about such issues as the human rights situation and civil war in Sudan are supported by all partners. Recent EU joint action has included a statement on 31 October which condemned the use of violence by the Sudanese authorities to evict residents from a Khartoum squatter camp.

Bermuda

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the criteria for selection for the position of commissioner of police and deputy commissioner of police in the overseas dependent territory of Bermuda.

Mr. Baldry: It is that the officers should be qualified and experienced with the ability to introduce the most modern administration, management and policing techniques to see that the Bermuda police service provides efficient and effective policing, responsive to the needs of the community.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what procedures are being used to select the successful candidates for the positions of commissioner and deputy commissioner of police in Bermuda; and which individuals will be involved in their selection.

Mr. Baldry: In accordance with section 87 of the Bermuda constitution, the appointments are made by the Governor in consultation with the Public Service Commission.

A shortlist of eight Association of Chief Police Officers candidates was prepared by the ODA senior police adviser in consultation with Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary and the deputy commissioner of the Metropolitan police. Preliminary interviews of these candidates were conducted by the deputy Governor, the Minister of Labour and Home Affairs and the ODA senior police adviser. Three of the eight were selected to travel to Bermuda for a final interview.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present salaries of the commissioner of police and the assistant commissioner of police in Bermuda; and what are the proposed salaries for both posts for their replacements.

Mr. Baldry: The present salaries are $110,465 and $88,644 respectively. The proposed salaries are the same.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if native Bermudians may apply for all vacant posts in the administration of Bermuda.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. Bermudians are the first source for candidates for all vacant posts in the public service in Bermuda.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of state for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the current vacancies in Bermuda for the posts of commissioner and deputy commissioner are open to (a) suitably qualified Bermudans, (b) suitably qualified candidates from other dependent territories, (c) suitably qualified candidates from the Caribbean and other areas in the region and (d) suitably qualified candidates from Africa.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. All vacancies are open to suitably qualified candidates. Priority is given to Bermudians where possible. In this particular instance, in the absence of any suitably qualified Bermudian candidates, the Governor and Government decided to recruit from the UK.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the country policy plan for the overseas dependent territory of Bermuda.

Mr. Baldry: There is no country policy plan for Bermuda. Country policy plans are draw up for those Caribbean dependent territories which are recipients of aid from Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will place in the Library the report produced by Lionel Grundy on the Bermudan police force in 1994; what assessment he has made of the effect of the report on morale of the Bermudan police force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The report was compiled by HM inspector-general of the dependent territories constabulary, following a request from the Governor of Bermuda. The report is confidential to the Governor and Government of Bermuda and will not, therefore, be placed in the Library.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's position regarding the recruitment of non-Bermudian policemen at all ranks to the Bermuda police force.

Mr. Baldry: No. That is a matter for the Governor and the Government of Bermuda.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs where the advertisements for the posts of commissioner and deputy commissioner of police in the overseas dependent territory of Bermuda have been placed.

Mr. Baldry: The posts were not advertised in this instance and, because of the need to fill the posts with reasonable expedition, the Governor and Government decided to recruit from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which posts in the overseas dependent territory of Bermuda have been reserved specifically for expatriate white Britons;

(2) what representations he or the Governor of Bermuda have received from opposition parties in Bermuda regarding the replacements for the commissioner and deputy commissioner of police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, columns 463–66, concerning overseas travel at public expense by spouses of Ministers, what proportion of the spouses' visit was dedicated to official visits and business.

Mr. Baldry: When a spouse accompanies a Minister on an overseas visit, her time is dedicated to accompanying the Minister on his official programme or following a parallel programme.

Pakistan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made since his return from Pakistan to the Pakistan Government regarding legislation they have proposed providing for the death penalty for certain categories of drug traffickers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have made no such representations.

More than 80 per cent. of the heroin seized in this country originates from south-west Asia. Much of this passes through Pakistan.

We have for some time been pressing the Government of Pakistan to introduce comprehensive anti-narcotics legislation. The ordinance signed by the President on 5 January has the force of law. Many of the provisions of the new ordinance are welcome and should enhance Pakistan's ability to combat drug trafficking.

I welcome provision in the new legislation for the seizure and forfeiture of the proceeds of drug trafficking. I hope that, before long, Britain and Pakistan will negotiate a bilateral asset confiscation agreement which would allow us to trace, freeze and confiscate the assets derived by drug traffickers from their crime. No one should profit from this evil trade.

The inclusion of provision for the death penalty as the maximum sentence for the possession, import, export or transhipment of more than 100gm of heroin—or equivalent—is a matter for the Government of Pakistan, provided that respect is shown for the provisions on the death penalty in international human rights law.

Overseas Diplomatic Residences

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley of 6 December, Official Report, column 168 and the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) 16 January, Official Report, column 286, what information is collected about the cost of upkeep of overseas diplomatic residences owned by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Goodlad: Information on all expenditure associated with diplomatic properties is accounted for in accordance with Government accounting rules. The expenditure on upkeep of property at posts is recorded by functional subhead—maintenance, furnishing, utilities etcetera—and not by individual property. To identify the upkeep, therefore, of owned residences of heads of post, for example, it would be necessary to extract specific information from a range of subhead records held at posts. This is not readily done. With the advent of a new financial management accounting system in April 1996, it is the FCO's intention to make aggregation of the relevant figures more easily attainable.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors made it (a) possible to provide information in respect of the cost of upkeep of diplomatic residences in response to the question of the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 16 January, Official Report, column 286 and (b) impossible to provide such information in response to the question of the hon. Member for Cynon Valley of 6 December, Official Report, column 168.

Mr. Goodlad: The question from the hon. Member of Wallsend of 16 January asked for details of total running costs for certain posts and total entertainment costs for those posts. This information is held centrally and is therefore relatively easy to identify.

The question from the hon. Member for Cynon Valley of 6 December asked for details of the cost of the upkeep of owned residences of heads of post. Such expenditure is included in a range of overseas subheads which combine the total cost of maintenance, furnishings, utilities and other upkeep costs for overseas offices, heads of mission residences and staff residential accommodation. Since the responsibility for such maintenance is partially delegated to posts and partially exercised in London, each post would be required to prepare and submit separate analyses; this could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Iraq

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of UN Security Council resolutions regarding the retention of full-scale sanctions against Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UN sanctions against Iraq should remain in place until the Iraqi Government comply fully with their obligations under all relevant UN Security Council resolutions.

DEFENCE

Pitreavie

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the final destination for the Comcen equipment currently at Pitreavie.

Mr. Soames: On current plans, the principal items of Comcen equipment at Pitreavie would be relocated as follows:

a. Tandem CLX computers to the new Portsmouth dockyard Comcen.

b. Ten channel RATT ship shore equipment to Faslane.

c. Two core network packet switches to other nodes in the naval shore telecommunications network. The precise destination remains subject to detailed planning for reconfiguration of the NSTN.

d. NATO submarine broadcast control equipment to either Comcen Whitehall or RAF High Wycombe.

A number of small obsolescent equipments and system components at Pitreavie would be disposed of. Those with remaining useful life would be retained in store to support other Comcens.

As stated in the consultation document on Pitreavie, where final destinations for relocating equipment are unclear the most expensive option has formed the basis of the estimated costs involved.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations underlay the decision to include in the average costs quoted in C31 consultation document of the defence costs study on Pitreavie of both general running costs and one-off costs.

Mr. Soames: Both general running costs and one-off costs need to be taken into account to gain a complete understanding of the overall costs and relative savings associated with particular options. This was the basis of the approach used in the consultation document on Pitreavie. In the case of future unprogrammed one-off costs, provision was made, where appropriate, on the basis of figures derived from historical expenditure patterns.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the conduct of the consultation process over the future of Pitreavie.

Mr. Soames: Proposals on the future location of FOSNNI's operational headquarters were promulgated in a consultation document dated 21 October 1994. Amended financial information relating to these proposals was issued subsequently on 16 December. The period allowed for consultation was extended slightly to allow for this additional information to be studied and consultation formally completed on 6 January 1995. Responses to our proposals are currently being given careful consideration and I hope to announce a decision shortly.

Service Accommodation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to maximise proceeds on the sale of Ministry of Defence houses.

Mr. Soames: Married quarters which are suitable for individual sale are normally offered for sale to service personnel through the services discount scheme. Any properties not suitable for this scheme are currently being offered for sale in bulk to housing associations at a discount in return for nomination rights on some of the properties for personnel leaving the services. Any properties not taken up through schemes are offered for sale on the open market at full market price.

Motor Vehicles

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the breakdown by company and country of origin of purchases of motor vehicles under his Department's enabling contract arrangements in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Military Equipment

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he gave to the leasing of tracked tractors before inviting Caterpillar Overseas SA of Switzerland to tender for the reconditioning of 82 tracked tractors under tender No. ABRO1A2/1695; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Staff Cars

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he gave to the leasing or contract hiring of staff cars before inviting tenders for replacement of part of the staff car fleet under tender No. LV2a/255; whether the successful contractor will be required to provide maintenance of the vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Naval Equipment Procurement

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about naval equipment procurement plans.

Mr. Freeman: I am pleased to confirm that an order valued in the region of £40 million has been placed with BAeSEMA to build an ocean survey vessel for the Royal Navy's hydrographic service. The new ship will be built by Appledore Shipbuilders Ltd. in Devon under sub-contract to BAeSEMA and will carry out systematic hydrographic surveys in the world's oceans, replacing the existing specialised vessel HMS Hecla. This order recognises the importance to the Royal Navy of a continuing specialist hydrographic capability and is part of the Government's plans to replace current hydrographic vessels and equipment as it becomes necessary, which were announced by the then Minister of State for Defence Procurement in the House on 8 March 1994.

Bosnia

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the United Kingdom intends to respond to the recent United Nations request for additional troops and equipment to enable UNPROFOR to implement the cessation of hostilities agreement in Bosnia.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government made a formal offer to the UN yesterday of an additional United Kingdom contribution to UNPROFOR. This consists of three Royal Air Force Chinook helicopters for military resupply and movement of UNPROFOR, and a further 12 British Army helicopters, comprising six Lynx and six Gazelles for air reconnaissance and transport. A further three Chinooks will be available on standby in the UK. We are also offering to provide up to 19 additional UN military observers to augment the 18 UK UNMOs already in theatre.

In reaching this decision, the Government judged it essential to respond positively to the UN request in order to support the recent cessation of hostilities agreement, which offers an opportunity for concluding a durable, negotiated peace settlement to which all the parties can agree and by which they will abide. As a member of the five-nation contact group leading the peace negotiations, and as a nation with one of the largest military contingents in Bosnia, this positive response demonstrates the Government's firm and continuing commitment to a lasting peaceful solution to the conflict.

Directorate of Marine Services (Naval)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to contractorise or privatise those depots and vessels that are administered by the Directorate of Marine Services (Naval).

Mr. Soames: We have at present no plans to contractorise or privatise any of the depots or vessels administered by the Director of Marine Services (Naval). Invitations to tender will shortly be issued to a number of companies and to an in-house team, however, inviting bids for the provision of services undertaken at present by the directorate.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed at Her Majesty's mooring and salvage depots throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: A total of 137 staff are employed in the depots at Pembroke dock and Fairlie.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed by his Department's Directorate of Marine Services (Naval).

Mr. Soames: The service employs some 1,770 staff.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed aboard vessels that are the responsibility of his Department's Directorate of Marine Services (Naval).

Mr. Soames: Some 1,200 of the directorate's staff are employed afloat.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those contractors who are carrying out marine service operations for his Department's Directorate of Marine Services (Naval); when they began their contract; how long the contracts were for; and which operations they cover.

Mr. Soames: The information is as follows:

Contractor	Period of contract	Operation
James Fisher and Son plc	3 June 1991 to 2 June 1995	Range safety
AV Seawork	1 May 1993 to 30 April 1998	Support to training exercises, including sea survival.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when was the last review carried out into the operation of his Department's Directorate of Marine Services (Naval); and what were the recommendations of that review.

Mr. Soames: A study into the feasibility of market testing the Directorate of Marine Services was completed in February 1994; this concluded that the marine services organisation should be market tested. The future of the organisation was also considered during "Front Line First", in common with all naval support services; this endorsed the findings of the market testing feasibility study.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reviews have been carried out into the operation of his Department's Directorate of Marine Services (Naval) in the last 10 years; and what were the recommendations of those reviews.

Mr. Soames: In addition to the market testing feasibility study and "Front Line First", which were both completed during 1994, there have been two separate reviews of the totality of operations carried out by the Directorate of Marine Services (Naval). The first of these was undertaken during 1989–90 and resulted in a division of the directorate's responsibilities between the Commander-in-Chief Naval Home Command and the Chief of Fleet Support. As a result of difficulties subsequently experienced with this approach, a second review was undertaken in 1991–92, resulting in re-unification of the directorate.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those depots that are the responsibility of his Department's Directorate of Marine Services (Naval).

Mr. Soames: The Director of Marine Services (Naval), whose headquarters are in Bath, is responsible for:

Her Majesty's mooring and marine salvage depot, Pembroke Dock, Dyfed;

The NATO mooring and support depot, Fairlie, Strathclyde;

Marine services bases within HM naval bases at Devonport, Portsmouth, Portland, Faslane and Rosyth;

Marine services bases at Greenock and Kyle of Lochalsh.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what operations which are the responsibility of his Department's Directorate of Marine Services (Naval) have been privatised or contractorised in the past 10 years.

Mr. Soames: The following operations, previously the responsibility of the Directorate of Marine Services (Naval), have been privatised or contractorised during the past 10 years:

Range safety at coastal ranges around the United Kingdom (contractorised);

Support to sea survival and other training exercises (contractorised);

The Gourock to Kilgreggan ferry service (privatised).

Army Base Repair Organisation Bovington

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have started employment at ABRO Bovington since that establishment became an agency; how many were, on recruitment, (a) established civil servants with more than 10 years service, (b) established civil servants with less than 10 years service, (c) currently unemployed, (d) ex–casual or period contract MOD or civil service staff and (e) currently employed outside of the MOD and Civil Service.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from J R Drew to Mr. Ian Bruce, dated 20 January 1995:

I am responding, as Chief Executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation, to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of people who have joined the staff of ABRO Bovington since the launch of the Agency on 1 April 1993.

The total number is 48, which breaks down as follows:

	Industrial Staff	Non-Industrial Staff	Total
a. established civil servants with more than 10 years service:	1	1	2
b. established civil servants with less than 10 years service:	2	3	5
c. currently unemployed:	3	3	6
d. ex-casual or period contract MOD or Civil Service staff:	25	2	27
e. currently employed outside of the MOD and Civil Service:	7	1	8

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the plans for the future of the Atomic Weapons Establishment.

Mr. Freeman: Hunting-BRAE Ltd., which manages and operates the Atomic Weapons Establishment on behalf of the Ministry of Defence, is today announcing a rationalisation of the sites of the establishment. This will involve some transfers of work to Aldermaston, and also the closure of the Cardiff site, the partial closure of the Burghfield site, and the transfer of the responsibility for some of the work carried out at Foulness site to the single defence science and technology agency proposed by the defence costs study. In all there will be about 850 job losses.

These proposals will be made possible by the completion of work on Trident warheads. They will allow sensible economies to be made without in any way affecting our ability to meet our present and future needs, and they have our full support. Our nuclear policy is unchanged. The Atomic Weapons Establishment will continue to underwrite the safety and reliability of warheads now in service and will retain the capability to design and produce warheads in future as circumstances make necessary.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the proportion of pensioners receiving income from savings identified as (a) all pensioners, (b) single male pensioners aged under 75 years, (c) single female pensioners aged under 75 years, (d) single pensioners aged under 75 years, (e) pensioner couples aged under 75 years, (f) single male pensioners aged 75 years and over, (g) single female pensioners aged 75 years and over, (h) single pensioners aged 75 years and over and (i) pensioner couples where at least one partner is aged 75 years and over; and if he will provide figures for the mean and median amount received for the latest year in which figures are available.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table.

The proportion of Pensioners with Investment Income with the Mean and Median Amounts for those in Receipt

	Proportion with Investment Income (per cent.)	Mean Amount (£ per week)	Median Amount (£ per week)
All Pensioner Units	76	43.30	10.10

Single pensioners 75 and over	70	30.20	4.10
Pensioner couples with one partner 75 and over	83	55.60	13.40

Notes:
1. Percentages are rounded to the nearest one per cent. amounts rounded to the nearest 10p.
2. Estimates are drawn from the 1992 family expenditure survey at July 1992 prices.
3. Single pensioners are defined as those over state pension age, couples are those where the husband is over state pension age.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the mean and (b) the median income of (i) single pensioners and (ii) pensioner couples before and after housing costs in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table.

Mean and median income for single pensioners and pensioner couples 1992 (£ per week)

	Single pensioners	Pensioner couples
Mean net BHC	109.40	206.20
Mean net AHC	93.00	190.70
Median net BHC	86.30	162.90
Median net AHC	62.80	145.80

Notes:
1 Figures are rounded to the nearest 10p.
2 Estimates derived from the 1992 family expenditure survey.
3 "Single pensioners" are defined as single people aged over state pension age, "Pensioner couples" are married couples where the husband is over state pension age.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of pensioner households with total weekly incomes below income support level.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Estimates of the number of pensioner units who would be eligible for income support and with incomes below their income support level are contained in the DSS publication "Income-related Benefits: estimates of take-up in 1992" which was published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

National Insurance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the annual revenue which would be raised by the Exchequer if employer national insurance contributions were extended to cover all benefits in kind.

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is estimated that the extension of employers' contributions to all taxable benefits in kind would raise approximately £250 million in a full year. This is based on an estimate of taxable benefits in kind reportable to the Inland Revenue in 1994–95. It assumes the rate of national insurance contributions payable as currently chargeable under class 1A.

Take-up Rates

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the benefit take-up figures for 1992 will become available.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of pensioner households which do not claim (a) housing benefit and (b) income support to which they would be entitled; and what is this figure as a proportion of the total non-take-up of these benefits.

Mr. Roger Evans: Estimates of the income-related benefit take-up for 1992 have today been published by the Government Statistical Service. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Disability Legislation

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to produce a copy of the Disability Discrimination Bill using pictures and simple text to make it accessible to people with learning difficulties.

Mr. Hague: The White Paper, which explains in detail the Bill's provisions, is available in a full and simplified summary version on audio cassette. A shortened, simplified written version is also available. We have no plans to produce copies of the Bill in pictorial formats.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to produce a copy of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill using pictures and simple text to make it accessible to people with learning difficulties.

Mr. Hague: Publication of private Members' Bills is arranged by the Member concerned. There are no plans for this Department to become involved in the publication of this Bill in alternative formats.

Child Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents with care on income support prior to April 1993 (a) have had their cases taken on by the Child Support Agency and (b) will have the take-on of their cases delayed;

(2) how many parents with care, who have not returned their maintenance application form for over six months, will not have their cases pursued;

(3) how many parents with care in receipt of family credit prior to April 1993 have (a) had their cases taken on by the Child Support Agency and (b) have still to have their cases taken on;

(4) how many parents with care, who have returned their maintenance applications forms with insufficient information to progress the case, will not have their case pursued; and, in this category, what is the Child Support Agency's definition of insufficient information;

(5) if parents with care who do not return their maintenance application forms for six months or more will have their cases delayed or if this provision will apply only to those outstanding for more than six months at 20 December 1994.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Frank Field, dated 20 January 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the operations of the Child Support Agency.

Between April 1993 and the end of October 1994, the Agency recorded the issue of 1,111,700 maintenance application forms to parents with care. Of these, 291,000 went to parents who were in receipt of income support before the implementation of the Child Support Act 1991, and 296,000 to parents receiving Family Credit (FC) or Disability Working Allowance (DWA). Cases where FC or DWA was in payment prior to April 1993 cannot be identified separately within this latter figure, but there should be no remaining cases in this category where an application form has not been issued to the parent with care.

The measures announced on 20 December will enable the Agency to give priority to improving its performance in achieving accurate and regular payments of maintenance in the applications already received, and in the new cases which it will continue to take on.

The measures allow the Agency to defer the take on of the remaining pre–April 1993 income support cases, with an estimated 340,000 cases being deferred.

In addition, some several thousand cases are expected to be deferred where an application form was issued more than six months ago but either has not been returned at all, or is lacking information necessary to progress the case. Such information includes, for example, details of the absent parent and/or the qualifying child. Parents who have returned their incomplete form will be asked whether they wish the Agency to continue to process their application at the present time. This will be a one off exercise relating only to maintenance application forms issued before 1 July 1994.

A precise figure will be available for the cases which can be deferred where the application form was issued before 1 July once an exercise has been completed to identify those which fulfil the criteria. This should be about the middle of March.

The Agency will continue to deal with all applications arising from new and repeat claims to benefit, and from parents not in receipt of benefit without existing maintenance agreements. It will also still be able to take on cases where parents in receipt of income support wish to make an early application for a maintenance assessment. There is absolutely no question of deferring a case because the Absent Parent has refused to cooperate with the Agency.

The Agency will recommence the take–on of the deferred cases where the Parent With Care is currently in receipt of a prescribed benefit just as soon as it is in a position to deal with them promptly and effectively.

I hope that this is of help.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents with care since implementation of the Child Support Act 1991 have (a) not returned the maintenance application form, (b) had good cause accepted and (c) been subject to the benefit penalty.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Frank Field, dated 20 January 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the total number of maintenance assessment forms not returned to the Child Support Agency and the number of claims by Parents With Care (PWC) of good cause not to cooperate with the Agency in arranging maintenance.

According to the Agency's records, 1,111,733 maintenance application forms have been issued and 802,561 returned. However, not all of the remainder still have action outstanding since good cause activity will either have been completed or still be ongoing in many. In others, the parent with care will no longer be in receipt of a prescribed benefit.

The Agency accepted that in 57,000 cases the PWC had good cause not to cooperate with the Agency. Of the 39,000 cases where good cause was not accepted, a total of 11,500 reduced benefit directions were issued to the Benefits Agency for imposition.

Details of the number of cases in which benefit was actually reduced is not currently available, except at disproportionate cost. The Agency is, however, taking steps which will make this information available in the future.

I hope that this is of help.

Automated Credit Transfers

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners opted to receive their state pension by bank automated credit transfer in 1994.

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Sir Andrew Bowden, dated 19 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the proportion of pensioners receiving payment of Retirement Pension (RP) by bank automated credit transfer (ACT).

Information is not available in the exact form requested. This is because information is not collated to define whether ACT payments are made to either a bank or building society account. To provide information specifically relating to ACT payments made to banks would incur a disproportionate cost.

As of 20 November 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, a total of 2,844,721 pensioners were having their RP paid by ACT. This represented 28.63 per cent. of the total caseload.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Parliamentary Questions

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many parliamentary questions she has referred to chief executives of next steps agencies in each year since 1992.

Mr. Heseltine: The information is as follows:

Parliamentary session	Questions answered by chief executives[1]
1993–94	11
1994–95[2]	5

Notes:
[1] A number of questions have required answers from some, or all of the Department's 10 agencies.
[2] Figures shown are as at 18 January 1995.

South Africa (Visits)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how often he has visited South Africa since the beginning of 1993; what were the dates of these visits; and if he was accompanied by British businessmen on any of these visits.

Mr. Heseltine: I have visited South Africa once since the beginning of 1993. My visit took place over the period 9 to 15 July 1994 and I was accompanied by 57 British business men.

Directors (Disqualification)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he intends to take to ensure that directors are disqualified when they have committed a misconduct in relation to the insolvency of a company.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: During 1994, proceedings were issued against 747 unfit directors of insolvent companies representing a 77 per cent. increase over 1993—422 directors. During 1995, it is proposed to make further additional resources available to the Insolvency Service's disqualification unit, which combined with the benefits accruing from implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Public Accounts Committee on disqualification, will enable the increased effectiveness achieved in 1994 to be further improved.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Fraser: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the cost or savings to his Department of contracting out of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The consultants, Stoy Hayward Consulting, concluded that value for money and other potential benefits needed to be definitively tested; and that the bidding process would provide such a test of value for money.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the applicability of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Order 1981 to the contracting out by his Department of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No decision to contract out work of official receivers has been taken; any decision would be subject to the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 and the procedures applicable to contracting out which are set out in it.

In the circumstances it is too early to consider the issue of Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981, the implications of which may not become clear until the nature of proposals in any bidding process could be assessed.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of the Lois computer system; for what purpose it was designed; and what estimate he has made as to whether his Department will recover the cost of investment in the Lois computer system following the contracting out of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The estimated cost of the Lois computer system, which is designed to assist official receivers in the administration of cases and in particular with the production of the many documents that have to be prepared, is £8,490,150.

As no decision to contract out the work of official receivers has been taken, the question of whether the costs of Lois would be recovered in the event of such a decision has not yet been considered.

Advisory Bodies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the policies and legislation initiated over the past three years that were based on proposals from (a) the Overseas Projects Board, (b) the Offshore Industry Liaison Committee, (c) the Energy Advisory Panel and (d) the Advisory Committee on Coal Research.

Mr. Heseltine: The information requested is as follows:

a) Overseas Projects Board

No legislation has resulted from the work of the Overseas Project Board over the past three years. However it has acted as a valuable source of advice to Ministers on how Government resources including aid and trade provision, overseas projects fund and ECGD cover should best be directed. It has also set up sector working groups, co–opting wider industry representation with appropriate experience, to identify project opportunities overseas and develop tactics, jointly with government, to maximise the United Kingdom's chances of winning contracts. So far, seven groups have been set up covering airports; railways and mass transit; power; water industries; telecommunications; healthcare; education and training.

b) Offshore Industry Liaison Committee

OILCO does not initiate policies or legislation. It has advised Ministers on issues arising from activity on the United Kingdom Continental Shelf and has facilitated a dialogue on matters such as construction demand, forecast of activity and training. A working group set up under OILCO's auspices reported to UKCS competitiveness in February and November 1993.

c) Energy Advisory Panel

There have been no proposals from the energy advisory panel for policies and legislation as its principal role is to assist in the preparation of the Government's annual energy report.

d) Advisory Committee on Coal Research

No legislative proposals have been initiated by the advisory committee on coal research in the last three years. Policy was initiated by the Government under the advice of the coal task force, who were the predecessor to the ACCR. A summary of the policy is published in Energy Paper 63, which is held in the Library of the House of Commons.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the programme of work for (a) the Overseas Projects Board, (b) the Offshore Industry Liaison Committee, (c) the Energy Advisory Panel and (d) the Advisory Committee on Coal Research.

Mr. Heseltine: The information requested is as follows:

a) Overseas Projects Board

The Overseas Projects Board will continue to provide expert advice to Ministers and their officials on issues affecting UK industry's ability to compete effectively for major project business overseas. The seven sector groups of the Board have produced action plans and have identified a number of opportunities. These are being pursued.

b) Offshore Industry Liaison Committee

OILCO does not have a programme of work. The committee is free to consider and give advice on all issues which fall within its terms of reference.

c) Energy Advisory Panel

The principal role of the energy advisory panel lies in assisting in the preparation of the Government's annual energy report. This involves regular meetings with officials to discuss the structure and content of the energy report.

d) Advisory Committee on Coal Research (ACCR)

The programme of work for the ACCR is as outlined in Energy Paper 63 (annex B) which is held in the Library of the House of Commons.

Correspondence

Mr. Heppell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if a complaint from a member of the public would be treated unfavourably by his Department if the letter of complaint included grammatical errors.

Mr. Heseltine: It certainly should not be treated unfavourably.

Anglian TV Shares

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of the Board of Trade who was the independent QC called in to advise the Secretary of State on the DTI report on Lord Archer of Weston–super–Mare's share dealing in the Anglian TV shares; and what instructions he was given.

Mr. Heseltine: I was advised on this matter by Mr. Edmund Lawson QC. I am not prepared to disclose the instructions which he was given. These instructions and the advice which he gave were confidential, and to disclose them would involve disclosing the substance of the inspectors report, for which there is no provision in the Act.

Export Credits

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what months since 1980 the Export Credits Guarantee Department has declared Nigeria off–cover for medium–term export credit.

Mr. Needham: The ECGD, having paid substantial claims in respect of defaults on credits to Nigeria, suspended medium-term cover on 1 February 1984. However, already issued offers for medium–term cover were held valid until they expired. Such cover has not been available for new business since that date.

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the definition of defence contracts as used by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Needham: All sales involving overseas defence organisations such as ministries of defence or armed forces.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 76, concerning overseas travel at public expense by spouses of Ministers, what proportion of the spouses' visit was dedicated to official visits and business.

Mr. Heseltine: Visits by Ministers overseas involve a full programme of official engagements. Many of these will not be appropriate for a spouse's participation. A spouse's visit will therefore include some of these engagements as well as separate engagements organised by the British embassy. This has been normal practice under successive Governments and applied in the case of all the visits by DTI Ministers referred to in my answer of 22 November.

Export Control (Costs)

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the total running costs of his Department's export control organisation for each of the last five financial years.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The total running costs for the Department's export control organisation for the financial years 1989–90, 1990–91, 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94 were £2.6 million, £2.8 million, £3.3 million, £3.2 million, and £3.7 million respectively.

Iraq

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance was given by his Department to British companies visiting the Baghdad trade fair centre in November.

Mr. Needham: A number of British companies were given licences to communicate on the supply of humanitarian goods, currently permitted under UN sanctions, which enabled them to attend the Euromed and Watertech exhibitions held in Baghdad in November.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assistance is being given by his Department to the proposed trade mission to Iraq on 15 February;

(2) when he last met the Iraqi British interests group;

(3) which companies are involved in the proposed trade mission to Iraq on 15 February; what is its purpose; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what assistance is being given to (a) Thames Water International, (b) Amersham International, (c) Leyland Trucks, (d) RB International, (e) Angus Fires, (f) Quest International, (g) Metrito UK and (h) United Projects to visit Iraq in February.

Mr. Needham: I have heard of the proposed trade mission to Iraq by the Iraqi—British interests group and I have seen the reports of its activities in the press. I have not met the group. Neither it nor the companies reportedly involved are being provided with Government assistance to visit Iraq. Apart from those identified in the press, I am not aware of the companies involved.

Promotional Offers

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider introducing legislation that protects the consumer against the failure of promotional offers.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 19 January 1995]: I consider existing controls in this area to be adequate.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare

Sir David Steel: To ask the Attorney-General what was the result of his action over the Lord Archer share dealing allegations with particular reference to possible grounds for prosecution; and what plans he has to take the matter further.

Mr. Heseltine: I have been asked to reply.

The Financial Services Act 1986 places responsibility for these matters on me. I appointed inspectors on 8 February 1994 to investigate allegations concerning share dealing by Lord Archer and they presented their report to me on 18 July 1994. As I announced on 28 July 1994, I concluded, on the basis of the inspectors' report and departmental and other, independent, legal advice, that the Department should take no further action against any of the individuals concerned in the investigation.

HEALTH

Ambulance Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what places or areas in England or Wales responsibility for running the emergency ambulance service is that of an authority which includes directly elected members of the public, or persons other than those directly, or indirectly appointed as employed persons.

Mr. Sackville: All ambulances services in England are national health service trusts or parts of trusts, with the exception of the London ambulance service. All trusts have a chairman appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and up to five non-executive directors, two appointed by the relevant regional health authority and the remainder by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The London ambulance service is managed by South Thames regional health authority on behalf of the RHAs in London. Ambulance services in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mixed-sex Wards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes have been made in respect of policy on mixed-sex wards in the national health service since 1965.

Mr. Sackville: None. National health service hospitals have always been expected, as a general principle, to provide accommodation in such a way as to preserve the dignity of the individual patient, prevent embarrassment, and at all times to ensure acceptable standards of privacy. This has not changed since 1965, but is now a national standard under the patients charter.

The patients charter in England has been strengthened to ensure that patients are better informed so as to enable them to make a more informed choice on whether to accept accommodation in a mixed-sex ward. Under new charter standards, patients should expect single-sex washing and toilet facilities.

General Practitioners, Sunderland

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what allocation of funds per patient is received (a) by general practitioner fundholders and (b) by non-general practitioner fundholders in Sunderland.

Mr. Malone: Information from Northern and Yorkshire region indicates that general practitioner fundholder budgets in Sunderland for 1994–95 average £140 per patient. District health authorities purchase all hospital and community health services for the patients of non-fundholding general practitioners, as well as those services outside the fundholding scheme for the patients of fundholders. Because of this, the equivalent information is not available for non-fundholders.

Fraud

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the extent of fraud in the national health service each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: We do not collect comprehensive information on the level of fraud against the National Health Service. However, the recent Audit Commission publication, "Ensuring Probity in the NHS", copies of which are available in the Library, reported that proven fraud was small.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific actions she has taken against fraud in the national health service since 1989.

Mr. Sackville: The prime responsibility for preventing and detecting fraud lies with the boards and managers of national health service bodies. We have, however, taken a number of national measures including the strengthening of external and internal audit, the creation of audit committees in all NHS bodies, and the issue of guidance on improving internal control in the NHS.

Cancer Care

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements cover the provision of palliative care to terminal cancer patients who are discharged to a nursing home.

Mr. Sackville: Where a patient with terminal cancer is discharged into a nursing home and is assessed as requiring specialist palliative care, it is the responsibility of the health authority to provide any such care over and above general nursing care. Specific arrangements should be agreed locally between health and local authorities.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements govern the employment by general practitioner fundholders of Macmillan nurses to care for their patients.

Mr. Malone: Palliative care services such as those provided by Macmillan nurses are not included within the scope of the current general practitioner fundholding scheme. There are currently four total purchasing pilots—a further 30 are being established—where fundholders can purchase all hospital and community care including palliative care. These pilots will be evaluated as part of the national programme.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many specialist breast cancer care units there are in the NHS.

Mr. Malone: The number of consultants who specialise only in the treatment of breast cancer is not known.

Cold Weather Deaths

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the excess winter death rate in England in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

The figures in the table give the percentage difference in the number of deaths recorded in the period December–March, compared to the average for the preceding August to November and the following April to July.

England

Year	Percentage difference
1988–89	+7.7
1989–90	+16.2
1990–91	+13.4
1991–92	+12.6

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence her Department has of trusts collaborating with each other in the provision of services;

(2) what rules regulate collaboration between trusts in adjoining areas and in disparate areas.

Mr. Malone: None. The organisation of services should, in all cases, reflect the best interests of the public as both patients and taxpayers. Health authorities have the duty to ensure the services meet the needs of their local population. On 12 December 1994, the national health service executive published HSG(94)55 entitled, "The Operation of the Internal Market: Local Freedoms, National Responsibilities".

This guide sets out the criteria by which arrangements between trusts may be assessed in order to ensure they serve the interests of the public. It states the circumstances in which the NHS executive will intervene to protect the wider public interest, balancing this against the need for local freedom to shape services to best meet the needs of the local population.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what time commitment is expected of (a) NHS trust chairmen and (b) NHS trust non-executive directors.

Mr. Malone: National health service trust chairmen and non-executive directors normally devote around 16 to 24 hours per week and 16 to 24 hours per month respectively.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts have confidentiality clauses in their contracts for employees.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trusts have merged since April 1991.

Mr. Sackville: Since April 1991, three mergers between trusts have taken place and 16 mergers between trusts and directly managed units.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trusts have contracts with district health authorities and regional health authorities that are (i) outside the district health authority area and (ii) outside the regional health authority area in which they are situated.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of accumulated assets of trust hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: The total value of net assets employed by trust hospitals at 31 March 1994 was £12,464,800,000.[1]

[1]Source: Trust summarised accounts for 1993–94. This figure is provisional being subject to audit by the National Audit Office.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what surplus or loss has been accumulated by each trust hospital.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library.

Malnutrition

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information has been collected nationally regarding malnutrition and the incidence of rickets.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health does not collect information specifically about the incidence of rickets. Malnutrition is a term which covers a wide variety of single or combined deficiencies of nutrients and/or energy. A report of the national diet and nutrition survey of children aged one and a half to four and a half, due to be published in the spring, will provide information on the food and nutrient intakes of this group of the population and their vitamin D status.

Non-NHS Health Care

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total value of all health care in England provided outside the NHS in 1994 and 1979.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected by the Department.

Contracts

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence her Department has of any non-NHS providers failing to meet their contracts with NHS bodies.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has no evidence of any non-NHS providers failing to meet their contracts with NHS bodies.

Private Insurance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's estimate of the number of people with the cover of private dental insurance, and of private medical insurance.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of people with private dental insurance is not collected by the Department.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence her Department has of a correlation between the change of numbers of people waiting for hospital in-patient treatment and the health of the nation.

Mr. Malone: There is no proven correlation between any change in the numbers of people waiting for hospital in-patient treatment and the health of the nation.

Life Expectancy

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence her Department has that life expectancy has decreased for any group of people during the last 15 years.

Mr. Sackville: The available data for England do not identify any sub-groups whose life expectancy has decreased overall in the last 15 years. Life expectancy for males and females for every age group has increased since 1980. Over the period there are a few age groups for which life expectancy shows year on year fluctuations, but the overall trend for every age group is upward.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what increase in life expectancy has been experienced in (a) England, (b) the United Kingdom, (c) each EC country and (d) each OCED country.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for life expectancy at birth in England, United Kingdom, each European Community country and each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country for males and females for the years 1980 to 1992 will be placed in the Library.

Pregnancy Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of women aged under 20 years become pregnant in each district health authority area, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The number of conceptions and the rate per 1,000 women aged 15 to 19 in each district health authority area in 1991, the latest year for which figures are available, were published in Office of Population Censuses and Surveys monitor FM1 94/1, "Conceptions in England and Wales, 1991: residents of regional and district health authority areas." Copies of this monitor are in the Library.

Private Patients

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the income from private patients for each trust hospital and special health authority hospital in 1993–94.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave her on 13 January, columns 267-68.

Disease Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people contracted (a) dysentery, (b) tuberculosis and (c) influenza in each regional health authority area and in total in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library. The data relating to influenza are cases of newly diagnosed episodes of influenza-like illnesses and are for the whole of England and Wales. A regional breakdown of these figures is not available centrally.

Staff Safety

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what compensation is offered to staff, including community care nurses, who are injured by patients, including challenging clients.

Mr. Malone: All staff are covered by the national health service injury benefits scheme. This is a statutory scheme providing benefits where an injury or disease, which is attributable to NHS employment, results in either a temporary loss of earnings or permanent reduction in earning ability.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many violent incidents were initiated by patients towards nurses and doctors, by region, in the last three years.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 27 January 1994, column 375.

Mental Illness

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the figures contained in her Department's recent survey of provider units of the numbers of mentally ill people placed on supervision registers for each unit in London.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not yet available centrally.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were conveyed by the police to a place of safety under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in each year since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: We will shortly be publishing a bulletin on "Legal Status Statistics 1987–88 to 1992–93" which will include figures for section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983. Copies of the bulletin will be placed in the Library.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been subject to section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983 during each year since 1991.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 535, how many acute psychiatric beds are needed in London for average bed occupancy to be 85 per cent.

Mr. Bowis: It is for individual health authorities to assess the need for acute psychiatric beds and to contract with providers of mental health services to ensure that sufficient beds are available to meet the needs of their resident population. Average bed occupancy rates can be agreed as part of the contracting process and will relate to local circumstances. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave her on 28 November 1994, column 535 for specific action being taken in inner London.

GP Fundholders

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner fundholding practices there were in each family health service authorities and regional health authority in each of the last four years.

Mr. Malone: The available information will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were de-registered from general practitioners lists in total and at the request of the general practitioner broken down by family health service authority, by regional health authority and separating fundholding from non-fundholding general practitioners in each of the last four years.

Mr. Malone: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Ynys Mon (Mr. Jones) on 19 July 1994, columns 367-68, and the replies that I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 24 October 1994, column 449 and on 9 December 1994, column 400.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence her Department has, and what representations it has received, on a link between the amount of general practitioner fundholding and the level of patient de-registration.

Mr. Malone: None.

Neurosurgery

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current policy of the Maudsley hospital in respect of the admission of emergency cases for neurosurgery; and what proposals there are to change this policy.

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for the Bethlem and Maudsley national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Bernard Williams, the chairman of the trust, for details.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will delay the closure of the accident and emergency unit at St. Bartholomew's hospital until 1 August 1995, pending a further review following the letter dated 13 January from the City and Hackney community health council.

Mr. Malone: No.

Patient Complaints

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what access her Department has to records of complaints from (a) patients and (b) members of surgical professions relating to surgical treatment; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The Department collects statistics on written complaints made by, or on behalf of, patients in England. The data give numbers of complaints which were wholly or partly about clinical issues but it is not possible to identify the numbers relating specifically to surgical treatment.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 252

SESSION 1994–95

10th January—20th January 1995

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
